WEST SIDE MAN FOR THE LEGISLATURE

David J. Marshall, candidate for the Legislature, is well-known resident of the Hilltop. He has been a newspaper writer and wage earner in Columbus about 30 years.

Westwood Lodge No. 770, K.of P.

Regular meeting this Thursday evening, July 13th at 7:30 o'clock.

E. M. Sebring, C C

C. W. Ruffing K. of R. and S

A most distressing accident occured last Sunday at Camp Wissalohickas on Big Darby Creek, a site recently selected and leased by a company of Hilltop residents. Eber, 14-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. D. J. McKinley, Jacksonville, Ohio, who, with his mother was visiting at the homes of his aunts, Mrs. Jacob Link, 59 N. Park Ave., and Mrs. Charles Link, 31 N. Oakley Ave., while in the water with other bathers suffered a heart attack and sank in a few feet of water not being missed by other members of the party. Mr. Jacob Link when wading to shore stumbling on the lad's body, picked it up, carrying it to shore not knowing it was the lifeless form of his nephew.

Boy Scouts of the party labored faithfully to resuscitate their companion and first aid was rendered by a Girl Scout nurse from a camp nearby but without avail.

The boy was rushed to Mt. Carmel where physicians pronounced life extinct at least one and one-half hour previous. It may be very timely to again warn bathers of the danger of entering the water soon after partaking of a meal.

The Hilltop Chautauqua which start next Saturday promises to be of unusual interest in the way of entertainment and instruction. There are several numbers on the program each one of which is worth the price asked for the entire course so far as instruction is concerned.

The big tent will be located on the North side of Broad Street about a square west of Hague avenue and will be handy to both Broad St. and Camp Chase cars as well as the Interurban line. A large parking accommodation for machines is also available.

The Community Daily Vacation Bible School has an enrollment of over 200 children with 60 children in the kindergarten. The teachers report a fine week and a growing interest in the program. The school runs for five weeks. It is free to all children of the Hilltop.

Memorial Baptist Church had only ten days before completed putting a new roof on its edifice, re-decorating both auditorium and prayer room, rewiring and placing handsome new electric lamps. Putting around its choir galleries delicate draperies, when without a moments warning the metal ceiling which eight years ago was nailed to the mortar ceiling collapsed and with heavy mortar and lath fell to the floor breaking many of the solid oak pews and other furniture. Had there been a congregation of 400 present not one could possibly have escaped injury or instant death. The clock hanging on the rear wall was unbroken went on its ticking. The musical instruments though entirely covered with debre were not scarred or one key out of tune. The pulpit and Bible and three pulpit chairs were untouched.

Though this church has been wonderfully blesed financially, numerically, spiritually under the present pastorate there were lessons needed to be learned by some of the old members which perchance only such a calamity could teach with its solemn notes or warning.

That same Thursday night B. Y. P. U. meeting was largely attended and when the pastor asked: What shall be done? Instantly there was an enthusiastic response. "Clean up and be ready for services Sunday morning." And such was the response. Tons of motar and medal, and lath and broken furniture was removed from the building and yards and the floors twice scrubbed and and the auditorium was ready for school and worship. City building inspector declared the building safe.

At the close of the sermon Sunday morning on the topic: "When not to give up," by a unanimous standing vote it was put on record that each would stand loyally by the pastor and raise the money all over again for the work and repairs and redecorations and relighting.

Mrs. N. E. Walcutt and father, L. W. Palmer and her daughter, Ethel Marie, attended the Palmer reunion at Coshocton, July 9.

The Hillcrest Baptist choir is not taking its usual summer vacation—but keeping up almost a full choir during these warm Sundays at both services—every member in this large choir has wonderfully advanced in their reading qualities that it is a pleasure to them when they assemble at practice to put forth their best efforts to prepare new anthems for Sunday services—very shortly the choir will commence to study "The Rose Maiden" by Cowen to be given in the very early fall followed up by the learning of Handel's Messiah for Christmas time. New aplicants already are seeking membership to the choir for next season, and any others who may wish to have their voices tested can see Mr. Knox at any time. The very best voices on the Hilltop are among its membership and some singers coming as far as Grandview and Arlington.

If any one is interested in learning to sing and read music and can't afford to attend a music school or could make this a side issue with your music school, you can get the goods delivered to them in this choir and not cost anything. But must have the required quality of voice, and talent and above all the "Pep" to work—that's us.

List your property with Mrs. Waker, 2458 W. Broad. Hilltop 474.

How Alice Was Jilted

By JESSIE DOUGLAS

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

She was a huddled little heap in the dim corner. She had cried until she could cry no more, and even her face seemed to smart from those scalding, searing tears.

Soon she would have to get up and meet the world again, and she sobbed as she thought of it. Life lay ahead of Alice Trowbridge like a long passage with neither window nor light to make it bearable.

She went over to the window seat and saw that the day was dying, a faint yellowing mist hung over the roofs of the great city and rifts of amethyst clouds were darkening to purple.

As she knelt there she could see quite plainly just how it had begun.

The little weather-beaten farmhouse with the twinkling panes of glass had seemed to her a haven of rest. She had crept up those clean narrow stairs the first night to the west chamber and had slept in the old walnut bed, the sleep of the exhausted, city-wrecked worker.

Could she ever forget the first morning when she had eaten her breakfast in the low-ceiled yellow kitchen from the oilcloth covered table, fresh berries and cream and crisp crumbling cornbread with country butter?

She and "Aunt Martha"—as she had come to call her—had fallen deep into talk, had found themselves kindred souls, had laughed at the antics of the newest kitten and had made, before the week was out, a great batch of yellow cookies together.

"You'd make some man a right nice little wife," Aunt Martha had said admiringly.

Alice had shaken her head gayly and cried, "My independence for me! Why, there's nothing like it! A cozy little flat and enough friends and books and pictures and flowers, what more could one want?"

Aunt Martha had only looked at her sagely.

"It's all right now, but wait till you get into your thirties and your forties!"

Thirties! Alice had turned her head away quickly to hide the flush that burned her cheeks. She had reached those ugly thirties now, and although she was quite willing to stay where she was, she didn't want to go any farther. Forty! Ugh!

"By George, We Forgot the Apples!"

They had both started as some one tramped across the kitchen floor and Alice had turned to see a young man drop a knapsack on the hearth and take Aunt Martha into his arms.

"Been tramping down through the Berkshires," he had explained, "and if you can take in a tramp for a few days—"

Take in a tramp? Suddenly the house was full of laughter and sunshine and the smell of delicious things. Norman Taylor came and went, smoking a crooked old pipe, teasing them both indiscriminately, and praising Aunt Martha's cooking.

"Never ate anything like your blueberry pancakes in my life!" he would say patting her arm. "And this cake! Good girl!"

Alice would laugh and flush when she had made the cake.

In the evening he would shoo Aunt Martha out of the kitchen and, making a great show of tying an apron around his waist, he and Alice would wash dishes. How long it took! He would wave a knife he was polishing in the height of argument and Alice, watching it fearfully, would burst into delighted laughter.

Could she ever forget that last walk they had taken? With a basket of apples over his arm they had gone shuffling through the rifts of bronze leaves to old Miss Winthrop's. She had tried to answer his gay sallies with her laughter, but her heart had been too heavy; on Monday he was going away.

Finally he had stopped short on the road and said, "What's the matter?"

She had meant to say, "Oh, nothing," but she heard her own voice saying, "You're going away."

Dismay caught her and her heart seemed to stop beating at that fatal [illegible].

"My own little girl!" was all he said.

They walked on through a golden haze—could she ever forget it?—the meadows seemed to be quivering with light under the sinking golden ball of sun. The windows of Miss Winthrop's cottage glittered like jewels as they came nearer. The whole world was irradiated by her exquisite, trembling joy!

They came in hand in hand until they saw Miss Winthrop sitting there and then Alice had remembered that a world did exist, a world where ordinary things happened and life went on its uneventful course.

"We brought you," she began and then looked in dismay at Norman's empty arm.

"By George, we forgot the apples!" he laughed.

They looked at each other guiltily, for the apples lay on the other side of the stone wall, just where he had dropped them when he had taken Alice in his arms.

Miss Winthrop for some strange reason had made Alice a present of a linen hand-drawn tablecloth. "That came from England, in my mother's chest!"

On the way back through the dusk they had debated the question whether Miss Winthrop had seen. The throaty chuckle of tree toads, the sleepy twittering of birds, the sweet breath of the woodlands had come to them through the twilight.

He was a perfect lover, Alice thought, considerate, understanding, strong. Nothing could ever come between them; nothing.

The wedding was to be in March and Alice had come back to the city with her head full of dreams. At once they began that delightful task, the selection of their furniture.

Alice wanted a studio with swinging Chinese lamps and lacquer tables and odd shaped satin cushions that were decorative rather than useful. Norman had said he wanted big comfortable chairs; and here their first difference had come.

"We don't want it to look like a man's club!" Alice had said.

"Nor like a Chinese junk shop!" Norman had laughed.

Next morning a letter had come.

"I can see now I've made a mistake—"

She knew it by heart, had read the simple words, unbelieving at first, and then in tearless anguish had walked the floor and at last had flung herself, a dishevelled little thing, to weep out her eyes in the dimmest corner of her sitting room.

He was tired of her! He had hidden it at first in his splendid, masculine way, but at last he had to write and tell her so. She loved him. She loved him more than ever and she knew she would be willing to live in an unpainted shack with an earth floor—

She stood up at last and went into her own room and tried to brush her hair with unsteady fingers. She looked at her swollen, pitiful face with distaste; she wondered how she was going to drag out the miserable empty days that lay ahead.

And then she heard his voice calling her.

"Alice! Alice!" he cried sternly when she did not answer.

The Lathrop's maid must have let him in. Alice couldn't face him now, she felt. But she must get it over some time—

"What's the matter?" he asked when he saw her drooping face in the dim room. He came toward her eagerly. "I thought I'd write you at once, Alice, and let you know, I made a mistake from the first—"

She shrank back against the wall at this last cruelty.

"I ought to leave all the selection in your hands—"

"I don't understand!" she whispered.

"Why, the furniture, darling, as though that matters, as though anything matters, when I have you!"

She was staring at him unbelievingly, and then she put her hands over her face. The letter, the letter—it had meant only this!

"Come back in an hour, Norman, and have dinner here with me," she said uncertainly.

She waited until the door had closed on him to realize that joy had come back to her, that her dream was still there and that greater than any dream was reality.

"All Aboard!" Shouts Bailey

ELWOOD T. BAILEY.

"ALL ABOARD!"

That is the call to which every railway passenger pays attention: it is final and admits of no argument. Those wishing to reach their destination on that particular train must not delay. Sometimes a later train may be taken, but once missed—that particular opportunity is gone forever.

"All Aboard!" is the subject of Elwood T. Bailey's first night lecture on this season's Chautauqua. It is to be one of the big events of the week, for in it there is an abundance of humor, inspiration and food for thought. There will be but one opportunity to hear Mr. Bailey during Chautauqua—the first day.

Favorite With Young People

DR. CHARLES S. MEDBURY.

FOR nearly twenty years Dr. Medbury has served as minister of University Church of Christ, Des Moines. For twenty-five years he has been in constant contact with student life. For twelve years he was chaplain of Drake University, whose campus is just across the street from University Church. He knows young people and their problems as do few men in America.

Dr. Medbury, assigned to Chautauqua's sixth day, is in the very prime of life—strong physically and mentally, an oratorical genius, with a mind trained for big affairs. His subject is "The Man of Now." In his lecture he faces the grave problems of the day squarely, acknowledges their seriousness and calls to men and women to solve them wisely.

Sheriff Seth Orndorff, of El Paso, Tex., changed his mind about the honor system after an experiment lasting four hours.

Twelve prisoners, without shackles were taken from the jail to work on a road, with the promise that, if they worked well without guards, they would be pardoned before their time was up. Five prisoners escaped before noon, and the experiment was called off.

Interested In Food? Then Be at Chautauqua

CHARLES G. JORDAN.

"WHEN DO WE EAT?"

This pertinent question has been handed down from generation to generation since the days of Adam and Eve. It will always be a pertinent question.

Charles G. Jordan, a member of the Pennsylvania legislature, will cover one of the biggest problems extant when he comes to Chautauqua and talks about the importance of team work between the man on the farm and the man in the city. He shows that the highest interests of these men are in large measure identical.

When he discusses farming, Mr. Jordan knows whereof he speaks. He has made a great success of a run-down farm in western Pennsylvania. The neighbors smiled when he announced he was going to redeem that farm, but they have not laughed at his expense for several years. Five years ago the agricultural interests took a day off and, headed by representatives of the state's greatest agricultural school, 5,000 farmers made a pilgrimage to the Jordan farm. They saw it and marveled at what had been done.

Then the neighbors awoke and said: "Jordan is all right; let's send him down to the state capitol." They did so, and since that time he has been chairman of the most important agricultural committees in the Pennsylvania legislature.

Mr. Jordan is an unusually eloquent and effective speaker. He has the angles of both the farm man and the city man, and at his "get-together" discussion here he will make some suggestions that will be of inestimable value to the entire community.

"Friendly Enemies," one of the greatest play successes of recent years, with a record of a two-year run in New York, is to be a feature of the coming Chautauqua. In the cast are only experienced players from Broadway. The performance is in three acts.

HENNA BATHS FOR OLIVE SKIN

Wildest Craze of London Society Women in Keeping With Oriental Gowns.

London.—A henna bath cult is forming among London's more ultra society women, who deem olive-colored skin something worth acquiring.

The craze is said to be of French or American origin. Baths, strongly tinctured with henna dye, are taken monthly and impart a delicate tint that looks well with evening dresses of Oriental shades and design, now popular here.

Buried in Old Dress.

Macedonia, Ia.—Mrs. Eliza Keast was buried here the other day in a dress which she purchased in England 37 years ago. While on a visit to her old home in Cromwell, England, she purchased the dress, and on arrival home expressed a wish that it be her burial shroud and had been carefully kept since then.

Verdun Hero Talks With Rubber Tongue

Paris, France.—Modern surgery has accomplished another uncanny feat. Insertion of an artificial tongue, enabling Sergeant Vialla, a Verdun wounded war veteran, to talk, has just been reported at the Val de Grace hospital. Sergeant Vialla lost his lower jaw in the war and it was reconstructed with a complete set of teeth. When the surgeons had finished this job, there was only the base of the tongue left, and Dr. Eugene Quenolle fixed up a rubber tongue and palate.

Plays "Yum-Yum" With Light Opera

DOROTHY SEEGAR.

In the light opera "Mikado," announced for Chautauqua, Miss Seegar is to have the pleasing and important part of "Yum-Yum." This role calls for a soprano voice of unusual range and brightness. Chautauqua patrons will agree, after hearing Miss Seegar, that she was wisely chosen for the part

After laying the foundation of her vocal study, Miss Seegar devoted three years to study under the noted Frank Bristol of New York City, among whose prominent pupils have been Olive Fremstad, Myrna Sharlow of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, and Alice Nielsen.

Studied Under World Masters

KELLER RECITAL COMPANY.

MISS LUE ALICE KELLER, pianist and composer, has studied under some of the best critics and performers of the French, Italian and German schools. The piano, under her hands, is an instrument of warmth, feeling and intelligence, revealing clearly the almost infinite range of human thought and emotion

Miss Grace Anne Keller, dramatic soprano, first attracted attention while studying voice at Ohio Wesleyan University. Later she was a pupil of some of the best known American, Italian and German teachers She sings a wide range of music and her enunciation is a delight.

Original compositions feature the Keller recitals, both afternoon and evening of Chautauqua's fourth day Their programs are especially appreciated by teachers and students of music, but at the same time there is a popular appeal that interests the entire audience.

DUNBAR BELL RINGERS.

THE peal of 125 bells, to be used by the Dunbar Male Quartet on Chautauqua's opening day, was made by the same foundry that cast the great bells of Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's Cathedral of London, as well as practically all of the well known church bells of the world The largest of the bells weighs twenty-five pounds and is sixteen inches in diameter.

It was in 1893 that Ralph and Harry Dunbar organized the Dunbar Bell Ringers at St. Joseph, Missouri. Previously they had gone to England and secured the set of bells, which undoubtedly is the most complete and perfect set of hand bells ever cast. The personnel of the quartet naturally has changed since its inception, but the company always has been under the personal management of Ralph Dunbar, who is the coach and producer of this season's Chautauqua company

"GHOST" TOWN ALIVE

$87,000,000 War City Near Nashville Is Being Revived.

Sprang Up Over Night During the War Only to Become "Ghost" City When Armistice Was Signed—Now Coming to Life.

Nashville, Tenn.—Nashville's industrial suburb, Old Hickory, which sprang up over night during the war only to become a "ghost" city when the armistice was signed, is slowly becoming a permanent industrial site. It is receiving serious consideration for various other purposes, too, including that of a location for a new vocational training school to be built by the Veterans' bureau.

Old Hickory, where the world's largest steam plant was in operation shortly before the war closed, cost the government $87,000,000. It has 8,367 residences sufficient to house 30,000 people. There are 1,112 factory buildings, fifty-four miles of standard railway track and forty-four miles of tram track on the grounds. It was perhaps the biggest powder plant in the world when the war ended.

First ground was broken for the city February 9, 1918, and operation of the first sulphuric acid unit began 116 days later. Within a few days many additional units were going at full blast.

Public meetings were held here when it became certain that the government would sell the power plant. The Nashville Industrial corporation, composed of people in the city who wished to invest in the project, bought the plant November 22, 1920.

Since then four new industries, a pulp and paper plant, a motor and body works, a cement factory and a starch and sirup plant, have been established at Old Hickory.

Many of the residences and apartments are in use either by those who live there permanently or by others who rent them as summer homes.

SOME LITTLE TRAVELER

MABEL FALLIS.

AS DRUMMER and xylophonist, Miss Fallis is featured with the Metropolitan Orchestra; announced for Chautauqua's second day. In presenting xylophone solos, she will have a full orchestra accompaniment, which adds materially to the effectiveness of her work.

KNIGHT MacGREGOR.

NOT LONG AGO, under the management of one of America's leading musical bureaus, Mr MacGregor was presented in a concert at the famous Aeolian Hall in New York city. The admission charge on that occasion was the same as is asked for the season ticket to this season's Redpath Chautauqua, on which Mr MacGregor is to appear with two assisting artists

Many of the numbers which this celebrated baritone used in his New York concert will be sung when he appears here He is especially good in such typically Scotch numbers as "The Hundred Pipers" and "The Auld Fisher."

JOHN B. RATTO.

WITH wigs and grease paint John B. Ratto, the entertainer announced for Chautauqua's second night, presents a series of character studies from everyday life. He is capable of impersonating all the way from the Dutch politician to Marshal Foch and back again He has so many characters at his command that he could hold an audience all night without repeating an impersonation

Ratto is funny in a way that is really funny. He never resorts to "horse play." With aching sides the audience laughs until it can hardly breathe, and then all of a sudden there is a hush as the performer glides into some pathetic number that gets close to the heart.

It is not necessary to relate that Ratto is one of the leaders in the art of impersonation. He is even more successful because he "makes up" for each character with the audience looking on. He "pencils" in full view, telling an appropriate story as he does so. Penciling finished, he turns quickly to the table mirror, adjusts his wig and faces about to surprise everyone with the accuracy of his impersonation.

Actors and Statesmen.

Our early presidents were friends of the actors, and corresponded with them as well as with the playwrights, says Montrose J. Moses in the North American Review. One reaches the conclusion that never, since the seventies or eighties, has the playhouse in America been so closely in touch with the social life of the people. I like to run through Washington's expense book to measure how frequently he bought tickets for the play; I enjoy the correspondence between John Adams and our polemical dramatist, Mrs. Mercy Warren; did not John Quincy Adams carry on a spirited debate with James H. Hackett, of Falstaff fame, regarding the plays of Shakespeare? It was a known thing in those days for legislatures to adjourn that an actor might be seen by the lawmakers. The romance of the play in America, therefore, is the romance of America in the making.

Horse's Revenge.

Horses have good memories and more sense than some imagine. There is a fairly well authenticated old story of a certain king of Syria who had a horse of which he was very fond, and which in turn was devoted to his master. The king used to ride this horse out to battle, but at last was defeated and killed in the fight. His enemy, rejoicing in his victory, seized the king's horse and mounted it. The horse seemed to know what had happened, and who was on his back, for he began to show the greatest fury. After trying for some time to throw his new rider off, he suddenly dashed off up a steep cliff; and when he reached the top, he leapt wildly down the sheer precipice, with the man still on his back. The rider had no time to save himself, and both he and the horse were dashed to pieces.

We have several buyers with $500 to $1000 cash. If you care to sell on such terms, let us know at once. Mrs. Walker, 2457 W. Broad, Hilltop 474 or 560.

Westwood Lodge No. 770, K. of P.

Regular meeting this Thursday evening, July 18th at 7:30 o'clock.

C. G. Bigler, C. C.
O. W. Ruffing, K. of R. and S.

Despite the excessive heat the first few days the attendance at the Chautauqua was very encouraging. The opening number by the Dunbar Bell Ringers was recognised as talent of a high order not frequently met with and seemed to assure the attendants that time and money spent for succeeding numbers would be well worth while. The lecture, "All board," by E. T. Bailey, following the first number proved to be another "bell ringer" in its particular line.

The second day's entertainment, the Metropolitan Orchestral Concert, enlivened by J. B. Ratto's impersonations of musical artists and some of the great men of history was educational as well as entertaining and impressed his hearers in a way that study might never have accomplished. The lectures and "round table" by Dr. P. W. Ward were an inspiration to every institution for good citizenship and should be given serious consideration in forming plans for industrial and social relations.

Montaville Flowers, in his lecture, "America Looking Ahead," uttered many truths, which, if acted upon in these days of turmoil and unrest would undeniably hasten a readjustment in civic conditions which is disturbing all peace loving and law-abiding citizens. The musical numbers by the Misses Keller were pronounced a combination of art and talent not excelled in rendition and composition and was heartily encored

SOME GOOD MAXIMS ANP CURIOSITIES OF THE BIBLE

There is nothing better in heaven than religion.

Our actions of today are the thoughts of yesterday.

A truthful woman is the greatest adornment of a home.

If you live in impure thoughts you will be impure in your lives.

Profanity is more or less a profession of your loyalty to the devil.

Nobody ever went to sleep indifferent to religion and waked up in heaven.

A child is loved by God because it has no opinions and wants to learn something.

Don't get into anybody's way with your naturalness, but try to be yourself wherever you go.

Run into heaven barefooted and bareheaded rather than miss it on account of anything in the world.

The Bible contains 3,566,480 letters, 773,746 words, 31,173 verses, 1,189 chapters and 66 books. The word "and" occurs 46,277 times, the word "Lord" occurs 46,277 times, the word "reverend" occurs but once, in the ninth verse of the 111th Psalm.

The middle verse is the eighth verse of the 118th Psalm. The 21st verse of the seventh chapter of Ezra contains all the letters of the alphabet except the letter j. The longest verse is the ninth verse of the 8th chapter of Esther. The shortest verse is the 35th verse of the eleventh chapter of St. John. There are no words or names of more than six syllables.—Ex.

ERUPTIONS ON SUN'S SURFACE

Cause of Upheavals of Vast Quantities of Gas Not Clearly Understood by Scientists.

The surface of the sun often is the scene of great and sudden upheavals of vast quantities of incandescent gases of many elements, these eruptions attaining heights of between 20,000 and 200,000 miles, according to the science service report of the United States Naval observatory.

A record-breaking upheaval appeared October 8, 1920, when a height of 516,000 miles was attained, considerably more than half the diameter of the sun. Part of the material in this upheaval returned to the sun, and part of it apparently was attracted to other planets. The velocity was over 200 miles a second.

Though eruptive prominences are frequently associated with sun spots, they are not essentially so, and this prominence was apparently an isolated phenomenon. The cause of these solar eruptions is not clearly understood, but it is probable that they are produced by a sudden release of subatomic energy beneath the surface of the sun.

We received last week the first issue of the re-established West Side Herald, published in the interest of our neighbors east of us, by Mr. Newton Thatcher, a Hilltop young man. It presents a very neat and newsy appearance and reflects much credit on its publisher. We wish for Mr. Thatcher abundant success, and our past acquaintance with him qualifies us to recommend him to all West Siders as a real gentleman worthy of genuine support.

Sylvester Jackson, 38, colored, died from complications Friday, at his home, 207 S. Oakley Ave. He leaves a widow, Mrs. Maude Jackson, one daughter, three sons, one sister and five brothers. Funeral was at 1:30 p. m. Sunday at the Oakley Avenue Baptist Church. The body was sent to Omega, O., for burial.

Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Miller of 89 S. Terrace St. are spending a month's vacation in Davenport, Des Moines and Sheldon, Iowa, visiting relatives and friends.

Miss Laura Kaiser of Mt. Vernon, O., who has been visiting Mr. J. H. Kramer and family, returned home Saturday, accompanied by Miss Cleo Cramer, who will spend her vacation there visiting relatives.

Miss Kathryn Freeman of Canton, O., is visiting her sister, Mrs. Otto Beckwith, 275 Whitethorne Ave.

Mrs. Hattie Randolph of 51 Highland Ave. is spending the month of July with her daughter, Mrs. E. C. Wright of St. Louis, Mo.

Miss Robbins and Miss Greiser leave Monday for a motor trip East, accompanied by Dr. and Mrs. Robbins, spending most of their time at Asbury Park, N. J. The School of Music on Midland Ave. will be closed for six weeks and the fall term will begin September 9th.

Miss Bessie Sperry, who has been teaching school in the Hawaiian Islands, arrived home last Monday. She was there about a year. She expects to be back in the West Broad School next year, where she has taught for a number of years.

The condition of Mrs. Jennie Hills, who was severely injured in the Motordome accident at the Muny Show grounds last week, is very much the same as former reports. Improvement will very necessarily be slow.

While visiting at the home of his uncle, Charles Dempsey, 228 N. Terrace Ave., Jack Dempsey became separated from his playmates and lost his way back home. Through the patience and kindness of Mr. Carl J. Barns the lad was finally restored to his anxious relatives.

Mr. C. J. Kohn, Funeral Director, received word Tuesday of the sudden death of his mother at Van Wert, Ohio. She was 77 years of age. Mr. Kohn left immediately for Van Wert. He is the only child that survives her and the last of the family.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Herbert C. Davis a son, Monday, July 17. Weight, 6¼ lbs. Name, Robert Herbert.

Mr. L. R. Watts, a former resident of the Hilltop (living at 162 N. Harris Ave.) now living at 110 E. Eighth Ave., is at Mercy Hospital dangerously ill after an operation for appendicitis.

The fire department was called on Monday to the burning of a house and haystack far out in the country southeast of the Hilltop. It was started by children playing with matches, so it is said.

The widening of the sidewalks to 10 feet on both sides of Broad Street is making a decided improvement to that street.

If you are going to buy or sell, see Mrs. Walker, 2457 W. Broad. Hilltop 474 or 560.

Wanted—A Man

By MARTHA M. WILLIAMS

© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"I don't know. If I did I wouldn't tell," Sarah answered pugnaciously.

Miss Dean, who had just asked, "How rich is old Captain Johnson?" hissed out a long "O-h-h!" followed by a frosty smile and "Pardon, I didn't dream you were interested there."

"I am not—the way you are," Sarah said, coloring hotly. "I do like the old gentleman; he's nice even when he's tiresome. If he were not I should make him welcome for my mother's sake. He knew her as a girl, and tells me so much about her nobody else can tell."

"I see; an hereditary romance," Miss Dean commented, smiling from the teeth out, only she was furious. Sarah, tall and twenty, vigorous, muscular, with clear, deep-seeing eyes and unafraid even of Mrs. Grundy, was likely to prove a lion in her path.

Or, rather, the path of the beautiful scheme she had mapped out before coming to Windmead. Its cornerstone was gossip vaguely heard of a man there, old, lone, fabulously rich and so accessible. All that saved him from coming to want was the fact that he could not spend aught but the income from his big estate. Further, he could not divert nor parcel out the income through settlements—gifts had to be made of cash after the money had accrued. Thus astute and faithful trustees had so far saved him the orgies of generosities he might have been seduced into, but he gave enough and so freely as to make him worth attention.

Miss Dean was of those workers in the vineyard of progress who feel worthy the highest possible wages—"all the traffic will bear." A keen nose for opportunity had led her at the welfare convention held a fortnight back to cultivate unknown provincial delegates, especially those who appeared shy and lost. Thus she had won the heart of Mrs. Linton, Sarah's devout sister-in-law, and been asked to visit Windmead for at least a month. Miss Dean had accepted for some indeterminate future time. When she learned next day that the Lintons were friendly neighbors of old Captain Johnson, she began making her plans for an easy and profitable summer.

Sarah owned Windmead, but gave herself no airs of proprietorship. Brother Jim was her pal and mentor because she loved him so dearly she tried to feel more than a tepid fondness for Molly, his wife. It was an effort, but she did not let the fact appear. It was only to the old captain she ever even spoke truth, saying: "If it weren't for her ballast of piety Molly is so light the first big wind would blow her clean away."

Thereat the captain had chuckled, merely pretending to frown. But next day he had said irrelevantly: "What a pity, Sarahkin, you can't divide brains with Mrs. Molly. If you could I should not have so much trouble in thinking up a match for you. The country boys are pretty much clodpoles, the town fellows sissies. I've a great mind to advertise, 'Wanted—A real man.'"

"Do, please!" Sarah had entreated. "Find him and I'll agree to take him sight unseen, provided he measures up to your pattern. Otherwise nothin' doin'."

"What a shame I have no grandson, else I could cut out fifty years or so," the captain had answered, sighing. "I'll never insult you by saying 'Will you be an old man's darling?' You are not for sale. Pity your mother couldn't overlook the thirty years' difference, you might be my daughter, but I didn't try to change her mind; she loved another man, and I knew it."

"I'll adopt you illegally as my grandpop," Sarah had answered, masking a sigh with a laugh. Memory of all this made her flush a lovely scarlet at the Dean insinuation. She hated herself for blushing until she caught an exultant gleam in the Dean eyes.

It roused her protective instinct. She said lightly: "Oh, no romance at all; just the basis for a nice business arrangement. I adopted him as a grandfather some time back. We will have the papers drawn pretty soon. That won't be like the other way round. If he adopted me I might inherit a tidy fight for his fortune. In default of blood heirs it goes to colleges and things. He won't have a chance of ever coming into Windmead. I shall make a new will—so, soon as we settle things. Besides, you know, real estate never goes back."

"I wonder what standing a wife would have?" Miss Dean said pensively. "About the same as a snowball at the equator," Sarah said recklessly. "But why speculate idly? I won't marry the captain, and he surely won't marry anybody else."

"About that we shall see," Miss Dean said, but inaudibly to her inner consciousness. On the surface she swam away wrapped in silent meditation.

Then tricksy Fate took to raw double-dealing all round. She laid the captain by the heels with lumbago and sent Sarah to serve as maid of honor at a wedding a hundred miles away.

Sarah meant faithfully to write every day at least to her old dear. She hated writing, but did really keep faith the first day. After that she was so held and hindered anything but postals was impossible. Long distance was small help. Captain could not get to the phone; besides, getting connection was a work of so much time and bother it seemed not worth while. Thus Fate unfairly cleared the way for Miss Dean, a gifted letter writer as ever put words on paper. She went daily with Molly to ask after the captain, but could by no means be persuaded to set foot in his house. Instead she sent in letters—her very best brand. Fairly written, full of sympathy, but not maudlin, touched lightly with humor and breathing throughout subtly her desire to help in making the world and the race better. This not at first—not until the captain, who found diversion in answering courteously her sendings, himself invited light upon her plan. After that the deluge. She was far too adroit for outright solicitation, but her suggestions were double-shotted and went home straight. The captain sent for his trustees. In their absence came a bright young fellow, Truman by name and nature. By the time he had read the third Dean letter he sensed what impended and went over to the opposition.

The opposition was, be it known, Sarah Linton. Truman meant to marry her as soon as he got a firm foothold. Windmead, he knew, must be left out of the calculation. Brother Jim would never make a living elsewhere and Sarah could not possibly turn him out. But he kept all that in the back of his mind, while the captain, kind soul, unfolded his great scheme. It was to compound his income for the five years he might still reasonably expect to live and give all but the barest pittance to "the noblest of philanthropies —that which teaches humanity to live its best."

Such arrangements took time, said Truman. The captain agreed. He also agreed to say nothing to anybody until further developments. As a result Truman invited himself to the far-off wedding. Luckily, he had been at college with the bridegroom. And he must have carried water of persuasion along, for when he came back a week later he brought a wife, whom he called, saucily, Sally of the Valley. Straight to Captain Johnson he took her, bursting in upon the convalescent with, "Cap'n, here's the answer: She'll teach humanity to live its best. In proof, she is adopting you legally. We're going to live with you if you let us, and save you from the pious Philistines."

The captain chuckled. "Just in time," he said, "Miss Dean proposed this morning for the good of the cause. Now she can't marry me without the consent of my mother."

MAY BE EARTH'S SATELLITE

Only Explanation Astronomers Can Offer for the Presence of the "Gegenschein."

There is visible in the night sky under favorable circumstances a faint light, rounded in outline and situated always exactly opposite to the place of the sun. It is called the "gegenschein," and is one of the most inexplicable objects known to astronomers. It was Pickering who suggested this explanation of the gegenschein. It may be a "sort of cometary or meteoric satellite" attending the earth.

It is supposed to be composed of a cloud of meteors, situated about 1,000,000 miles from the earth and revolving around it in a period of just one year, so that the sun, and the meteors are always on opposite sides of the earth. It is estimated that the size of this ghostly satellite may be nearly the same as that of the planet Jupiter, viz., about 85,000 miles in diameter.—New York Herald.

LAID CURSE ON THE BIRDS

Legend Tells How Churchman Ascribed Evil Influences to the Singers, and Banished Them.

In the days of the crusades when that Bernard who wrote the hyma "Jesu the Very Thought of Thee" was the greatest man in Europe the monks of Himmerade in the Upper Moselle valley on the Rhine were accused of leading wicked lives. Bernard went to rebuke the sins which were making the country notorious, but found he could accomplish nothing. It was a great country for singing birds, for it was just at the mating season of the year, and after consideration the good man decided that the songs of the birds were leading the monks into wrong. So out he went into the fields and woods, and cursed the poor birds, ordering them to be banished. Then, so the story goes, the monks became good and led holy lives as they had promised. But the abbess of a large convent on the island of Studen heard of the curse, and pitying the poor birds induced them to come and live near her establishment. Then the robins, nightingales and larks settled and sang. But to the nuns their singing was of heavenly not earthly love, and led them on to nobler, sweeter lives, for to the pure all things are pure. This continued for a time until the evil once again brought temptation and the Studen convent became noted for its evil as it had been before and was pulled down because of the bad example. But it is very likely that the birds had but little to do with it in either case. At any rate that is the tale they tell you there to this day, says the Montreal Family Herald.

Tiger Had Taste for Chinamen.

The tigers of the Malay peninsula have developed a wonderful liking for the Chinese laborers employed on public works. Perhaps this is partly due to the Chinamen's belief that the tigers are only big cats and are not to be feared. A British official writing in the Asia Magazine, says: "At a certain place where a gang was assembled for work, a maneater used to take a Chinaman each evening after dark from almost the same spot. This continued for some time. Learning of it, the superintendent of police, Captain Syers, our great shikari, dressed as a Chinaman, and nightly patrolled the road. Malays laughed, saying: 'Of course the tiger knows all about it.' They believed that the tiger possessed supernatural intelligence. And it certainly seemed that he did, for after many nights without sleep, the sportsman, who had never had the slightest indication of a tiger's presence, gave up and went home. The evening of his departure that tiger carried off another Chinaman from the same spot."

Noted Baritone at Chautauqua

KNIGHT MacGREGOR.

ONE of the high spots of Chautauqua week will be the closing night, when Knight MacGregor, baritone, and assisting artists, will be heard in an all-star festival of music. Mr. MacGregor, a native of Scotland, has a magnificent baritone voice that has been trained by masters.

In his program here Mr. MacGregor will be assisted by two other capable artists—a 'cellist and a pianist.

It is amazing how Chautauquas have grown since started by Bishop Vincent in 1874. There are 10,000 today, and they are spreading all over the world.

Accompanist For Knight MacGregor

EDNA WALLACE.

AN important contribution to the success of Knight MacGregor, the Scotch-Canadian baritone, who is to be heard on Chautauqua's closing night, is the capable piano work of Miss Wallace. She has been accompanist for Mr. MacGregor since the beginning of his conspicuous rise in the musical world, and the Redpath management feels confident that with Miss Wallace and an efficient 'cellist Mr. MacGregor will be ably supported in this season's concert engagements

LILLIAN JOHNSTON.

MISS JOHNSTON, who is a lyric soprano, reader and pianist, heads the company which is to be enjoyed on Chautauqua's sixth day. She is regarded as one of the most charming personalities engaged in platform work.

Associated with Miss Johnston is Florence Armstrong, messo-soprano and pianist. Their program includes a group of southern and colonial songs, in special costumes.

From the Corners of the Hill

Nashoba Avenue, one of the fine new streets running north from Sullivant Avenue in the new Head & Holton addition, west of the Imbecile Institution is well along in its improved condition. There have been a dozen new houses erected on that avenue this season besides others on Sullivant near it.

Another large new cottage is being erected on the grounds of the Imbecile Institution.

Mr. Berghold is erecting a fine bungalow on Sullivant, east of the Baby Camp.

Barnetson, Stevens and Fisher are erecting four single on Sullivant near Whitethorne.

A new filling station for automobiles is being put in at the corner of Hague and Sullivant Avenues. The many machines coming into town over the fine new drive on Sullivant Ave. west of Hague, will no doubt find this very convenient.

The remodeling and rebuilding of a part of the Friends Rescue Home on North Hague is about finished and it is expected to be ready for occupancy in two or three weeks. The Home will then have a capacity for about 25 girls. There are now 10 girls in the institution.

"Snow Followed by Clearing"

By ROSE MEREDITH

© 1923, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"Snow—followed by clearing—rising temperature—northwest gales," read Miss Amanda Harper to her nephew that March morning. Anthony looked out of the window and grunted: "My experience has been that snow is always followed by clearing—sidewalks!"

"Gracious sakes, Anthony, when I was young I didn't mind clearing off sidewalks—keeps the blood in circulation, and anyway, the Ladies' Aid society's meeting down at Emmeline's, and you will have to clear off her walk, too."

"Of course, auntie, I'll get at it at once—I've an important engagement at two this afternoon, and I'll have everything ready for the meeting before I go. Good thing I'm a lawyer who practices in his own house—if I had an office down street I would never get there on time!" he laughed good-humoredly as he left the table and stood by the window looking over the morning mail. Outside the world was wrapped in a white drift of snow which had fallen steadily for eighteen hours. How many times he had shoveled the paths around the house and then the broad sidewalk in front of the house. Next to the house was "debatable ground," for Anthony's old sweetheart lived there solitary, except for a couple of servants. Their break had come on the very eve of their wedding fifteen years ago, and the hurt was so deep that neither one had ever married. Anthony measured the long, lonely years by the winter snows that had fallen; in summer he rarely even glimpsed Rose Mary Gray, for she always spent the summer months with relatives at the seashore, whence she returned in October looking very brown and golden-hued, but her eyes were always sad.

"Fools!" sharp-tongued Aunt Emmeline said of the two.

"Poor souls," the more gentle Amanda would murmur, as she saw them pass haughtily by each other, Rose Mary with the slightest inclination of her fair head and Anthony with the stiff removal of his hat.

"If they would only look at each other just once—" groaned Miss Amanda that March morning as she shot a glance over toward Rose Mary's big square white house, which stood between the two big Harper houses on the main street. She was looking to see if old black Amos was clearing the snow from Rose Mary's walks, but the level stretch was unbroken. Something must have happened to Amos, for he was most faithful, and it had always happened that whenever Anthony reached the end of his own sidewalk, Rose Mary's would be cleared so he could proceed straight on to Aunt Emmeline's and clean that off. He might have hired the work done, but he really liked the exercise.

Anthony, booted and muffled for the work, went out with his snow shovel. As he shoveled the fleecy whiteness and the blood went tingling through his veins, old dreams came a-troubling him. If he and Rose Mary had married, they would have been living in Rose Mary's house and their children might have been playing in this very snow! At this moment, Anthony dug so viciously into the snow that he caught the shovel on the pickets of the iron fence and split it badly. His first thought was to go back for the other shovel, then after he had gone a dozen paces he retraced his step and went on shoveling, and that moment of indecision changed his whole life.

Driven by the anguished memories and bitter remorse that he had not humbled himself to the ground to keep his beautiful love, the man worked furiously, half blinded by the mist before his eyes; for an hour he shoveled, forgetting that he had not crossed the stretch between his house and Rose Mary's.

Three women watched him breathlessly.

Miss Amanda saw him when he retraced his steps on the cleared walk and fell to shoveling again. "He is crazy—he thinks he has passed Rose Mary's house—and he believes he's shoveling Emmeline's walk. Oh, my!"

Emmeline at her end of the block saw him finish clearing Rose Mary's path and come doggedly on to her house. "Land sakes! I never knew him to do that before—if the ladies hear about it the meeting will be lively!" she chuckled.

Rose Mary watched him with shining eyes, and a face kissed by the north wind into rosy blushes. "Ah, Tony—Tony, you must care a little!" she whispered as he went on toward his aunt's house.

At last he stopped. He thought he was getting cold, for never had he been so tired after shoveling off the two walks. He waved a greeting to Aunt Emmeline, and plodded on toward home. As he passed Rose Mary's gate a loved voice—how long since he had heard it—called him—"Anthony—Tony, stop, please."

He whirled about. The watching aunts saw his eager, bewildered face beneath his lifted cap. "Thank you, Tony, for clearing my walk," she said. Yes, Rose Mary had spoken to him again after the bitter years!

"For clearing your walk?" he repeated. "That is very little—that I can do," he said humbly, for he did not understand. ● ●

"Tony—there is so much to tell you—forgiveness to ask—will you come in and have some lunch with me?" She was blushing now as he opened the gate and followed her up the funny wriggly footpath she had cleared from the front door. "Amos is sick—and—when I saw you—you clearing the snow away from my walk—I was sure that the snow on your heart had melted and that perhaps—" she turned on the doorstep with outstretched hands. "Coming, Tony?" she faltered.

"For always!" he said boldly, as he followed her into the light and warmth of her home, and her love.

The "four traveling bachelors," Charles Merriman, Ernest Edmonston, Olin Perrott and Randolph Bigler, are here from Columbus, Ohio, to visit the University of Oregon, the fame of which has traveled to them back to their native city. The four boys are irrepressible high school students, and, as Charlie says, they're "getting a tremendous kick" out of the trip. They have visited the Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks, and intend to see the rest of the Western scenic spots before giving the trusty "flivver" a rest. All of them may return to Eugene and enter college in the fall, where Ernest and Olin will don football uniforms, and Charlie and Randolph will try to shine at basketball and wrestling, respectively. —Eugene, Oregon, Exchange.

ASK UNIFORM SIGNALS

Railway Association Recommends Standard Colors.

One of the Suggestions Made in the Interest of Public Safety Is Use of Yellow in Automobile Tail Lights.

Chicago.—In the interest of public safety recommendations for the standardization of colors for traffic signals are being considered. These recommendations were made on behalf of the signal section of the American Railway association at a recent conference requested by the Illuminating Engineering society and the International Traffic Officers' association and held under the auspices of the American engineering standards committee. The recommendations are:

1. The principle of red for stop everywhere, unless qualified by a more favorable indication—that is at highway crossings with railroads if train is approaching, in fixed signals and in the hands of traffic officers, at street intersections, at the ends of streets, and possibly to indicate excavations in streets.

2. Yellow for tail lights of automobiles, possibly excavations in streets and for calling policemen, or for any other purpose where caution is required; possibly at busy street intersections to indicate that the traffic lights will be changed from red to green or from green to red.

3. Green lights for fire escapes, for proceed at street intersections and other purposes to indicate the way is clear.

In presenting these recommendations on behalf of the signal section A. H. Rudd, chief signal engineer of the Pennsylvania system, said:

"The railroads are particularly interested in eliminating the use of the red light for various purposes other than that of indicating danger or stop unless qualified by a more favorable color. They desire that any scheme devised may conflict as little as possible with their own signal systems already established and that uniformity of indications in the protection of highway crossings at grade may be established."

HAS GOPHER TURTLE

Miss Theodora Olsen is pictured here with the gopher turtle brought from the dry pine woods of Florida by Curator Englehardt of the Brooklyn museum. The turtle is of a queer species and known to be a vegetarian feeling for most part on grass and various farm products. It is exceptionally tame and harmless, and at the least show of hate on the part of other animals will draw its head and legs into its shell.

DON'T FALL FOR SPANISH SWINDLE

Americans Have Quit Going to Spain to Rescue Wealthy Imprisoned Princesses.

GERMANS ARE NOW VICTIMS

Impostors Who Market Adventures to Credulous Investors Give Their Princesses Names of Famous Women Long Dead.

Granada, Spain.—Americans have quit coming to Spain in search of the beautiful and wealthy princesses imprisoned in a dark, damp tower by a greedy uncle who is anxious to annex her fortune.

The historic old Spanish swindle apparently has gone out of fashion in the United States, but it is still in vogue in other parts of the world. Germany has recently supplied quite a crop of kind-hearted gentlemen who advanced money for the release of the dark-eyed Spanish beauty who was suffering in a rat-infested cell and slowly dying on a diet of bread and water while the bats hovered about her head and added to the terrors of her solitary confinement.

Beauties in Granada.

Granada has always been a popular center for the men who have contributed to the relief of imprisoned beauties. Washington Irving and scores of lesser writers have credited Granada with having more beautiful women than any other city in the world.

The legend of the Rose of the Alhambra and the stories of the three beautiful princesses, Zayda, Zorayda and Zorahayda, hover about the Alhambra and make it the natural refuge for disappointed investors in distressed beauty.

So it is not strange that searchers for princesses should come to Granada after having sought vainly for mythical castles in mythical mountains. Most of the modern Spanish princesses are being held captives in castles by the sea. Castles by the sea are so much damper, and then it is much more romantic for rescue parties to approach the rock coast in ships and wave to the imprisoned princess, who will promptly tear her clothing to bits and make a rope with which she will lower herself from the gloomy tower.

Many of the impostors who are marketing adventure to credulous investors give their princesses the names of famous women who have been dead for centuries. Moraymah and Aishah, queens of the Moorish regime, who have been dead for over 400 years, and many other celebrities of history and legend have lent their names to princesses supposed to be in distress.

Visitors Are Warned.

Hotel keepers in Granada have become skilled in detecting visitors who are searching for imprisoned beauties. They usually make very guarded inquiries and seldom admit they have been duped. Frequently they inquire for gypsy fortune tellers, or astrologers, who probably charge well for their services.

Letters concerning the distressed princesses are usually marked strictly confidential, and instructions are given that nothing must be said to anyone lest the life of the princess be endangered. Most of the dupes are too much ashamed of their plight to confess openly that they have been gulled.

BIRD DIES WITH HER YOUNG

Killed in Forest Fire in New Jersey Rather Than Desert Her Nest.

Asbury Park, N. J.—A dead gaunt pine was a giant torch half way up its length in the big woods fire, which swept the outskirts of Brielle recently. At the very top was a giant fish-hawk nest, and braving the inferno of flame and smoke a parent bird hovered over the nest with a fish in its beak for the three baby inmates craning their necks over the edge. Finally, wheeling in desperation, the bird conquered its terror and settled upon the nest just as the tree toppled with a resounding crash into the blazing underbrush, carrying the hawk mother and babes to death.

BUYS DOGS FOR "PARADISE"

Texas Man Will Save Hounds Doomed to Death by City—To Build Big Kennels.

Beaumont, Tex.—The first "dog paradise" in the South will be established here by T. D. Brooks, president of the Brooks Supply company, who already has bought more than 200 canines of all breeds, sizes and colors which were awaiting execution in the city dog pound.

Mr. Brooks said he would build the largest and most complete dog kennel in the South. He gives as his only reason for the project that he was anxious to save the lives of homeless dogs which were to have been asphyxiated by the city.

HAVE NEW DOPE CRAZE

Indians of South Dakota Now Eating Peyote Bean.

Has Demoralizing Effects, Mentally and Morally as Well as Physically—Couple Habit With Religious Ceremonies.

Washington.—A new dope craze—peyote eating—has taken such hold on the Indians on the nine reservations of South Dakota as to create a problem which those who are interested in the welfare of the red man view with grave apprehension. The peyote bean is the fruit of a cactus plant, which grows along the Mexican border. It is known as the Indian cocaine, and has practically the same effect as that drug. Eaten by the Indians under any circumstances, it has demoralizing effects, mentally and morally as well as physically. To complicate the situation in South Dakota, the peyote habit has been coupled with religious ceremonials which combine ancient Indian superstitions with Christian rites, and the craze is now in full sway among hundreds of the nation's wards in the Northwest, says the Washington Star.

Saturday night has become the favorite occasion for these peyote orgies. Gathering in tents or huts, the devotees eat from 30 to 40 of the small beans, following which they begin to see visions.

Despite the traditions of the red Indian's reticence he is a great talker, especially when under the influence of a stimulant. In the grip of peyote, the braves claim to have wonderful revelations and are filled with the spirit of weird prophecy, which is unfolded to the gathered tribesmen in long and eloquent harangues.

In this state of drug-created frenzy they read from the Bible, offer prayers and sing hymns, using these devices to cover the degenerate activities which accompany the progressive effects of the drug.

The culmination of many of these peyote meetings is declared by those who have witnessed them to be most revolting. Many instances have already been called to the attention of the authorities of husbands and wives having been separated as a result of the peyote debauches, and the debilitating mental and physical results of the drug are already beginning to show in hundreds of the younger generation of the Indians.

Spreading north from the Mexican border during the past five years the craze entered South Dakota from Nebraska, where there are said to be about 400 addicts among the Winnebagos, Omahas and Poncas. From the Winnebago reservation it spread to the Yankton reservation in South Dakota, where there are said to be about 40 confirmed addicts, and then to the Ponca Creek station of the Rosebud reservation, where about 60 individuals are habitual users of the drug. The other members of the tribe have not yet fallen victims to the craze, the cult having its leadership from men of an age ranging from 30 to 45 years, which may be classed as semi-educated.

GIVE BOUNTY FOR MALE BABES

Government of Montenegro Takes Steps to Increase the Rapidly Dwindling Birth Rate.

Cetinje, Montenegro.—There has been an alarming decrease in the birth rate of Montenegro, due to the loss during the war of so many of the "Black Mountain's" fighting men. The government is offering premiums to mothers who bear male children. The females now greatly outnumber the males.

The incentives offered by the government to mothers of male children have resulted in pathetic appeals from the untutored peasant women to the American Red Cross nurses to give them "the medicine to make a boy."

In Montenegro boys are considered much more valuable than girls, and the constant prayer of the mountain dweller is that she may be blessed with a male child. This disparity in the sexes is largely the outgrowth of the days when Turkey held dominion over the Balkans and when the liberty-loving Montenegrins had an ever-present need of men to defend the homeland.

In Montenegro the women do all the work, the men considering manual labor undignified. They feel it is their chief duty to carry firearms and swords, talk politics and prepare for the next war.

BRIDE AND EX-SUITOR DROWN

Double Tragedy Ends Gay Night Among Cabarets of Hoboken.

Union Hill, N. J.—Mrs. Margaret Gallagher, nineteen, bride of two months, ended a gay night of rounds of Hoboken and Union Hill (N. J.) cabarets in the company of Thomas Cassidy, a suitor before her marriage to Andrew Gallagher, by leaping into the North river from a ferry boat at 5 o'clock in the morning. Cassidy leaped to rescue her and both were drowned.

Geologist Says Without Them We Would Have No Oceans or Carbon Dioxide.

KATMAI ERUPTION DESCRIBED

Most Tremendous Volcanic Explosion of History Passed Unnoticed Because It Was So Far From Centers of Civilization.

Washington.—It might be a surprise to many to be told that the fire-spitting, lava-spouting, earth-rocking volcano is one of mankind's best friends rather than his arch enemy, but such is the surprising declaration which was explained to the conference on geography of the National Education association in Boston recently.

The most tremendous volcanic eruption of history, that of Mount Katmai in Alaska in 1912, was described in this connection by Dr. Robert F. Griggs, leader of several parties sent to the scene of the cataclysm by the National Geographic society, and who discovered the valley of Ten Thousand Smokes, Katmai's neighbor wonder of nature.

Mankind's debt to the volcano has been more fully recognized by results of recent researches, says a bulletin of the society describing the unheaval. Without volcanoes, it is now believed, there would be no oceans, and to volcanoes we are indebted for carbon dioxide, without which human life could not exist.

Katmai Explosion Unnoticed.

The explosion of Katmai, the conference was told, was unnoticed because it was so far from the centers of civilization. Had the eruption occurred near New York city, the bulletin declares, the suphurous fumes would have polluted the air everywhere east of the Rocky mountains; the noise would have reverberated like an artillery duel across the central states. The lower Hudson itself would have been turned into a gigantic tomb.

However, due to the lack of population in that far region, there was no loss of life, and the eruption provides scientists and geographers now one of their greatest opportunities to study the phenomenon of volcanic action.

Though generally unaware of the eruption until long after, every inhabitant of the country, and almost of the world, felt its effects, one of which was the cold damp summer of 1912. This was caused by the interception of sunlight by the long-hanging dust cloud in the upper air. Even in cloudless Sahara, it was declared, the sky was overcast.

Repeat Ice Age.

A succession of such mighty explosions could plunge the earth into another ice age, it is believed.

An area around Katmai, larger than the state of Delaware, was covered that summer by more than a foot of volcanic ash which was enough to destroy all but the hardiest of vegetation. When the explosion occurred two cubic miles of material were blown off the top of the mountain, and the present whereabouts of the mountain top is still a mystery to scientists.

Money Lost Last Winter Found in Potato Field

Miller Ressler, a farmer, of Eden township, Pa., lost his pocketbook early last winter. He advertised for it in the newspapers and made personal inquiry without results. He mourned $60 as a dead loss. A little girl hunting potato bugs found the wallet in a field a few days ago. The notes were sent to a bank at Quarryville, Pa., for redemption.

A Mutual Discovery

By CORONA REMINGTON

© 1923, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"Guess you'd better get out here, Mary, and I'll drive around to the barn and unhitch."

Quickly the girl picked up her suitcase, and, jumping out of the buggy, started for the front gate.

"Where's mother?" she wondered. "Maybe she didn't hear us drive up."

At the click of the gate a neat, plump figure appeared hastily in the doorway, a figure clad in a brand new gingham dress and in shoes that squeaked beneath the weight of their burden.

"Land! How'd you get here, Mary? It ain't a minute since I looked out the door and you weren't in sight."

"Oh, mother, it's so good to be home!" The girl kissed the smiling old face and noted in one glance of satisfaction the healthy glow in her mother's cheeks and the sparkle of happiness in her eyes.

"You're looking a little bit peaked, yourself," remarked Mrs. Allen, picking up the suitcase and starting indoors.

Mary was glancing about at the old familiar home. She saw the new front steps, so white and shipshape, and the little strips of new flooring that had been slipped in here and there along the outer edge to replace the ones that had succumbed to the endless drip, drip of the rain. The whole place had the sleeked-off appearance of a home that has recently undergone a gurret-to-cellar cleaning, and Mary recognized with a throb these silent little signs of welcome.

"Think of it, mother, a B. A. college graduate, full-fledged and running over! I never dreamed I'd get there."

"But you did, and now I won't have to be worrying all summer about your going away in the fall. Lay off your hat, Mary. It's awful pretty. How much did you give for it? I'm going to pull off these shoes; they're killing my left foot. Then we'll go to the kitchen. I was just fixin' to roll out the pie crust."

Mrs. Allen tried to hide her excitement by talking rapidly.

"Bob was over this morning," she went on. "Got back Wednesday. Reckon you know more about him than I do, though, bein' he's probably been writin' to you most every day. He graduated with honors, the paper said. I told him you was coming home today, and he said he'd be over after supper. Reckon you two youngsters'll be glad to see each other again. He seemed kinder glum; didn't say much of nothing, and Bob generally carries on so much foolishness. Don't know what's the matter."

Mrs. Allen sat on a hassock in front of the upholstered couch and drew two eminently comfortable, flat-footed old shoes from beneath it. With a sigh she carefully removed the others, and pulling her stockings out at the toes, slipped on her shabby old friends.

"That's better," she said, rising. "Now I'll be able to get around. It's most supper time. We'll have to hurry. Land, Mary, what makes you so pale? Nothin' I said frightened you, did it?"

The girl tried to conceal her emotion with a laugh.

"No, not frightened, mother. Just dreading something, somehow."

"Pshaw! You're not botherin' about what I said about Bob, are you? He's all right; lookin' fine and a heap stouter than he was when he left last fall."

The supper somehow fell flat. Nobody had much to say; Mary was not in her usual spirits and Mrs. Allen felt disappointed. For a week she had planned that one meal, and the menu included Mary's favorite dishes, yet there had been no enthusiasm. "Tired and sort of let down from the graduation and the trip and all," Mrs. Allen concluded. As they were clearing the dishes away together a knock sounded on the front door.

"There he is Mary. You run on; I can finish this."

Mary, now quite pale again, stood beside the table and fumbled with the knives and forks in her hands.

"He's knocking again. Hurry up and take off your apron."

Mrs. Allen deftly jerked the strings behind her daughter's back and pushed her toward the door. Mechanically Mary went down the hall and met Bob Hansard coming in.

"Oh don't, Bob!" she said, backing away from his open arms. "I can't—we mustn't. Oh, it's terrible. Come into the parlor and let me get over with it."

Hastily she led the way into the stiff little room to the right of the front door, talking all the time.

"I—I don't know how to tell you; I can't. I hate myself, and I know you'll hate me, too, but it's the old, old story. When we became engaged I was in love with you, as I thought, but merely in love with love. I see now that I would probably have loved any other man that had brought me flowers and said nice things to me at that time. I wanted to write to you about it, but I simply couldn't. It seemed so impossible that I could be fickle and get interested in some one else when I was engaged to you. I know I'm not worth killing, and if you hate all the women on earth it's all my fault. I never despised any one so much in my life as I do myself today, but what can I do? It's all over, that's all."

With a convulsive little jerk she doubled up in a heap on the sofa and shook with sobs.

"Listen, Mary," Bob almost yelled, his hand on the girl's shaking shoulders. "I've been so stunned by what you've told me I couldn't speak. Don't cry, don't cry. Don't you hear, I'm happy—too happy to talk even. I'm in the same fix and have been nearly crazy the last six months wondering what to do about it. A fellow's in a worse mess than a girl when he finds out he's made a mistake."

For a second Mary looked up incredulously. "Ah, you're only trying to make me feel better. It's nothing but your soft heart."

"I'll swear it isn't, Mary. Let's walk down to the telegraph office and I'll let you see me send the wire asking her to marry me."

"It can't be true! It can't be true!"

"But it is, and I tell you I've been through purgatory these last months."

"Then I'll send a wire saying 'yes' to mine," she jubilated.

"Great! Shake, Mary, dear, and pals forever, eh?"

"Sure, and long live the memory of our boy and girl love affair."

Old Nursery Rhymes.

Some of the commonest nursery rhymes, which are taught to each succeeding generation of youngsters, are of as great antiquity as many of the most celebrated poems and novels of English letters.

"Sing a Song of Sixpence" was composed during the Sixteenth century. "Three Children Sliding on the Ice" dates from 1580. "London Bridge Is Falling Down" is apparently almost as old as the city itself. "Pussy Cat, Pussy Cat, Where Have You Been?" was written during the reign of Queen Elizabeth. "Lucy Locket Lost Her Pocket" came into being when Charles II reigned.

Hottentot Never Warlike.

Despite the ferocious connotation of his name the primitive Hottentot seldom engaged in war. He was accounted gentle and tractable. His most explosive quality was the language, now rapidly disappearing, which was easy enough so far as the noises that sound like a fuse had just burned out, and also in respect to its vowelized syllables, but the rapid combination of the two few white men could imitate. There was little reason for the Hottentot to fight, since all he required for his simple communal life was a patch of grass. In the evening he danced and sang and smoked. The characteristic orchestral piece was the gorah, a crude sort of mouth organ, made of a hollow stick and the entrails of a sheep. A drum and a reed which had the quality of a flute, completed the list.—National Geographic Society Bulletin.

Baby Falls From Window, Caught in Postman's Bag

Henry M. Druckman, of Brooklyn, N. Y., a letter carrier, was delivering mail when he saw a baby climbing to the sill of a third-floor window. He ran across the street to notify the child's mother, but the baby kept on climbing. Druckman got under the window just as the child, who had crawled over the sill, fell out. The letter carrier stretched his empty mail bag and caught the baby in it. The child was unhurt.

Skunks Lure Bees From Hives, Eat 'Em

Washington.—A report from Ohio received by the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture says that skunks are giving a great deal of trouble to beekeepers in that region. The skunks visit the hives at night and scratch on the outside till the bees come out. As soon as they appear the skunks eat them. The biological survey recommends that under such conditions the hives be fenced in with chicken wire at least three feet high.

GORILLA NEAREST APE TO MAN

But Scientists Do Not Claim He Is Ancestor of Humans—Evolution Theory Explained.

New York.—The gorilla, that 400-pound chunk of ferocity, was classed as the animal closest to man in its qualities of physical and mental endowment by scientists who addressed the annual meeting of the American Society of Mammalogists in the American Museum of Natural History. It was not contended that the gorilla is man's ancestor, but that in the group to which man belongs, which includes besides the gorilla, the gibbon, the orang-utan and the chimpanzee, the gorilla surpasses the other apes.

Dr. W. K. Gregory, curator of comparative anatomy of the museum, explained the theory of man's descent as evolutionists hold it today. Their contention is not that man is descended from one great ape, but that he goes back with them to a common ancestor, now long extinct. Certain fossil remains of this creature, Doctor Gregory said, show that the pattern of his teeth was closer to that of man's than in the case of any animal now existent.

Hair Saves Woman's Life.

Pottstown, Pa.—Although severely injured when she fell from a second story window while reaching for a screen the other day, Mrs. Clara Keim owes her escape from probable death to her long hair. She landed on her head on a cement walk, but her hair was so arranged as to form a cushion which broke the force of the contact. She was unconscious when found and taken to a hospital.

HELICOPTER TO BE USED SOON

Dr. Albert F. Zahm, Expert for the Navy, Declares It Is Not an Impossibility.

TWO TYPES OFFERED TO U. S.

Experiments Are Continuing in Hope of Perfecting a Motor That Can Be Depended Upon to Maintain Machine in Air.

Washington.—The helicoptor, or vertical rising air machine, is not an impossibility, and, should a real use for such a type arise, successful ones may be seen before many years, according to Dr. Albert F. Zahm, aeronautical expert for the navy. Had there been a need for the helicopter during the war, he said, any of several types could have been perfected, of which working models have been flown.

Much interest has been shown of late in reports of successful machines of the helicopter type being perfected in both Germany and England. However, while some flights have been made, none of any consequence are reported by a machine equipped with horizontal propellers or revolving planes, designed to rise vertically from a confined space and descend on the same.

That the helicopter is possible Doctor Zahm said, is proved by the German machine, which, rising several times to moderate heights, has carried observers, remained almost stationary while in the air, and descended in safety. The machine, however, has made no extended flight, such as would prove its dependability, but was tethered to the ground by a mooring rope. At times, when the motors failed, the machine dropped, and the passengers saved themselves only by leaping with parachutes.

The experiments are continuing, however, with the purpose of perfecting a motor which can be depended upon to maintain the machine without sudden failure, the scientist explained, for, as soon as the engine stops, the machine cannot glide to the ground, as does an airplane, but drops vertically. In a proper descent the propellers should be whirled slowly to ease the landing.

Two Other Types Offered.

Present hopes of attaining successful vertical flight rest mainly upon the endeavors of Emil Berliner, Washington inventor, whose experiments with the helicopter have extended over a long time; and of Louis Brennan of London, whose newest machine is reported as nearing completion. He is working to win the £50,000 prize offered by the British air ministry for successful flight.

The helicopters upon which most experimentation has been made consist mainly of two or more propeller screws mounted horizontally on a vertical shaft bearing engines, fuel and passengers. Equal numbers of propeller blades must revolve in opposite directions, that the body of the machine may not spin like a top.

Whether or not this type of machine is brought to actual use, Doctor Zahm stated, at least two other types of planes that may fly vertically have been offered to the government. This fact is not widely known.

One of these, of which Dr. Zahm observed experiments with a working model, was almost identical with the present type of plane, except that mounted behind the body were two sets of air vanes, in groups, tilted at an adjustable angle, like those of Venetian blinds.

When the power was turned on, he said, the "wash" of the air stream from the propellers, pushing against these groups of vanes, caused the model to rise gently vertically. The model was held in midair by the action, and when the power diminished it returned gently to earth. A full-size machine of the type, he said, would be equipped with engines of immense power in order to furnish sufficient air pressure, and when driven to a sufficient altitude the vanes would be so adjusted that horizontal motion would result. The plane could then fly in the usual manner, finally using the vanes again to descend vertically.

Able to Rest Motionless.

The other type offered to the army, he said, was of the present wing plan, equipped with three propellers, two placed far out toward the wind ends, and with vertical rudders and ailerons similar to those in use. The quicker lifting power was to be gained by having the wash of the central propeller act upon elevators on the tail of the body, while the side propellers would wash against the special ailerons on the wing tips.

In the air, Doctor Zahm continued, this machine could maneuver exactly as does the ordinary plane, cut figures and do stunts, besides being able to rest motionless in any desired position—vertical with nose up, if need be.

The best feature, he said, is that both planes of the new types are entirely feasible and can be constructed at any time. In fact, several European inventors and manufacturers are patenting designs of the second type, notably the Frenchman, Bleriot, one of the pioneers of aviation.

Experts for the government studied the second type during the war, it was explained, but the matter went no further.

PARIS BEAUTY SUES MANAGER

France's "Queen of Queens" Passes Up Marriage for Stage Contract.

Paris, France.—Because he dashed her hopes of becoming a stage star, France's "most beautiful girl" is suing a theatrical manager for breach of contract.

Elected by popular vote France's "queen of queens" for 1922 and acclaimed the most adorable out of 5,000,000 adorable blondes and brunettes, Mlle. Germaine Buchet expected to fulfill her childhood dreams of appearing before the footlights.

She turned down many offers of marriage, she alleges, to sign a contract for appearance in the operetta "Helen Returns," but the role went to a rival beauty.

Now Mlle. Buchet demands that the court make the manager keep his promise or pay.

BUYING POWER OF WAGES

Editor Ohio State Journal:

In your leading editorial of Saturday, July 1, commenting on the railroad strike, your able writer took occasion to say that our money, even after the reduction, would have a far greater purchasing power than previous to the war.

Permit me to say that most of the men affected never received as much as 100 per cent increase in wages, and we take the liberty of calling your attention to some of the more important items for living and the prices for the same:

Bread, 1922, 8 cents; 1914, 5 cents; per cent increase, 60.

Milk, quart, 1922, 9 cents; 1914, 5 cents; per cent increase, 80.

Sugar, 25-pound bag, 1922, $1.64; 1914, $1.05; per cent increase, 60.

Shoes, 1922, $8; 1914, $4; per cent increase, 100.

Telephone, 1922, $3; 1914, $1.50; per cent increase, 100.

Rent, 1922, $45; 1914, $22.50; per cent increase, 100.

Taxes, 1922, $23.66; 1914, $11.33; per cent increase, 100.

Street cleaning, 1922, $2.50; 1914, $1.08; per cent increase, 140.

Gas (minimum), 1922, 45 cents; 1914, 30 cents; per cent increase, 50.

Coal (best grade), 1922, $8; 1914, $4; per cent increase, 100.

Street car fare, 1922, 5 cents; 1914, 3½ cents; per cent increase, 62½.

Nearly all of the above articles are regarded as essential to the welfare of a well regulated family, and no family can exist without most of them. The minimum wage for an ordinary laborer as proposed by the labor board is 23 cents per hour, or $58.25 per month, if he does not lose any time, working 10 hours per day.

Please have your editor of home economics show in detail just how the $58.25 should be utilized to support a family of five at the above prices. It will help a lot of people to economize if it can be made to go around. If it can't be done we will have to steal enough to make up the difference somewhere, and in the United States there are more than 2,000,000, counting our families. Can this country afford to make that many thieves—RAILROAD MAN, in State Journal. Columbus, July 3.

AGED HILLTOP RESIDENT KILLED

Alva C. McFarland, 77, a painter, of 464 S. Powell Ave., was instantly killed when an automobile, in which he was riding with his son, Lee, was hit Monday night by a C., D. & M. car, south of Stratford.

The car had stalled on the tracks. The younger McFarland attempted to crank the machine, when he heard the traction car whistle. He tried to flag the oncoming car, but was unable to do so.

The father, who had remained in the machine, attempted to jump, but did not get clear of the machine, before the crash. The son escaped.

Besides his son, McFarland leaves a widow and one daughter, Mrs. George H. Quellette, 310 S. Hague Ave. The body was brought to Columbus Monday night. Funeral services will be held from the residence Thursday at 2 p. m. Burial in Union Cemetery.

Mr. McFarland was a Civil War veteran.

The automobile parade Monday night, boosting the Hilltop picnic at Buckeye Lake Wednesday, was a successful affair. A large number of fancy decorated machines taking part in the parade. Mr. W. R. Watts of the Watts Milk Co., won the prize for the best decorated machine, and Mr. Henry W. Schults won the prize for the most comical one.

Wednesday assumed a holiday aspect on account of the Hilltop picnic at Buckeye Lake, a large part of which took the traction line at 8 o'clock. Others went over in machines. The day being a pleasant picnic day a grand time was had by all those in attendance.

Don't forget Saturday is registration day for the Primaries which occur next Tuesday. If you did not register last year or have moved into your precinct since last election day, you will have to register Saturday to vote at the primaries.

C. A. McClure, expressing and hauling of all kinds, also cinders. 375 S. Eureka, Hilltop 3746.

WOMAN'S WILES AND GUILES

Mrs. Dove Cooed Her Satisfaction After Richard Had Compromised—Can You Beat It?

"O Richard, how fine you look today," cried Mrs. Dove before she gave her husband a smacking kiss on his left cheek. "I do believe I have the best-looking husband in Mudtown!"

And she gave him a resounding kiss on the other cheek.

Richard Dove looked steadily into his wife's eyes. What he saw was admiration and love—love and admiration, nothing else.

"And I have the smartest husband, too," went on Mrs. Dove proudly, stealing another glance at him.

Mr. Dove started to speak, but stopped.

"And the lovingest and kindest, also," finished Mrs. Dove. There was nothing more she could add.

Sadly Richard Dove looked at his wife.

"What is it, Nazimova?"

"I see' a new dress, Dickie," she cooed. "I just saw the loveliest one downtown yesterday for—"

"I'm sorry, Nazimova," said Mr Dove, "but I can't afford to buy a new dress. If it was a hat, now, I might—"

"Oh, dear!" sighed Mrs. Dove. "Well, then, I will have to be satisfied with a hat!" she said, looking down to hide the light of satisfaction in her eyes.

As she went upstairs that evening to put little Willie to bed she laughed softly to herself.

"That was a great idea," she thought. "I only wanted a hat, any way. I'll have to tell Mrs. Love it to use it on her Horatio."—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

Marie Tires of Jim

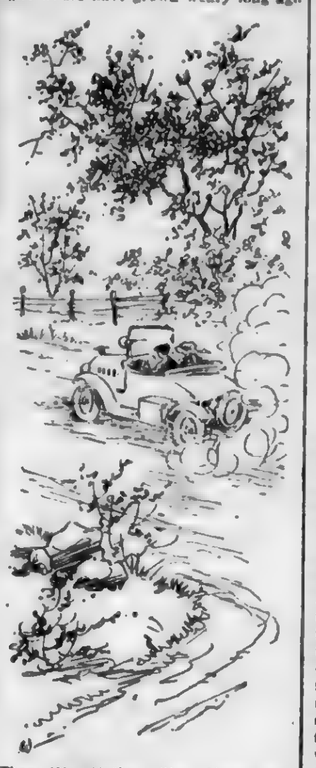
By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

For just two years Marie and Jim had been engaged and, until the day before yesterday, they had been quite happy. The long engagement was none of Jim's wishing. Force of circumstances in the shape of an invalid and absolutely dependent brother had made it impossible for Jim, just out of the service when he met Marie, to lay aside enough to justify the assumption of new burdens.



At first they had made plans for a somewhat indefinite future, but of late they had grown—Marie especially—to seize the present and let the days to come take care of themselves.

And now, this sunny afternoon when an advance spring breeze perfumed the air, they had quarreled.

"Yes, I like you, Jim," wailed Marie finally, only—only I think I am tired of you and tired of being engaged. Yes, it's dreadful to say, but how much better to find out before we are married. So here's your ring!"

Stupidly, Jim held out his hand for the shining bit of jewelry. Then he straightened his shoulders. "Of course, dear," he said soberly, "it's worlds better. I'll—I'll try to take it sensibly. Now, let's go home."

If, after Jim had left Marie, he wondered if any other man had been the cause of her defection, he tried to stifle the suspicion. To be sure, any girl would have grown weary long ago of this monotonous waiting. And he offered no happier prospects after marriage, if marriage could ever be. Well, his sole duty now lay with his brother.

As far as Marie was concerned no other man than Jim had ever claimed even one tiny thought. Yet there was another man in the offing—a tall, sleek, not unattractive youth, who had many times eyed Marie admiringly as they ascended together in the elevator to their respective places of employment. And that man, Bert Rogers, had decided to meet Marie. Six days after Marie's engagement to Jim was broken he accomplished his wish through the agency of a fellow stenographer of Marie's.

And on the day after he met Marie Bert drove her in his small but mile-devouring roadster far up along the Hudson. There was nothing slow about Bert.

Marie, left at loose ends of her own making, found life far more exciting now than it had been with Jim. Jim's money had been limited and had had to be spent in many ways. Bert's appeared to be ample and had but one outlet—one good time after another. And just now it pleased him to include Marie.

Seats at the latest comedy; supper at the most exclusive little restaurants; hamper picnics on distant beaches; midnight dances at softly lighted, glassy floored dance halls—Marie went the pace and didn't stop to wonder when—or where—it would all end.

Arrived the night of the infantry ball, the one annual extravagance she and Jim had permitted themselves, Bert tossed tickets for it into her lap as they sat together on a grassy bluff overlooking the Sandy Hook panorama.

"Not crazy about it," said Bert in his blase way, "but we might as well take it in."

Other years Marie had not fussed unduly about her clothes. Poor old Jim had thought that whatever she wore outshone the costumes of all the others. Bert, Marie realized, was considerably more critical. Therefore she drew on her rainy day balance and splurged.

Bert's flowers were lavish and showy, and, Marie couldn't help but think, not nearly as fragrant as the modest bunch of violets which had always come from Jim. Pinning them on, she sighed as she gave a final survey in the mirror. Would Jim ever have recognized, in the sophisticated image which met his eyes, his little Marie?

For some reason or other, nothing went just right. Bert could not dance—at least, not in that sturdy, swinging way she had learned to love in Jim. Also, she didn't care for the silly compliments Bert whispered in her ear as he held her rather too closely. Jim never would talk as he danced. Said he had a single-track mind and couldn't keep his feet and his tongue going at the same time.

Odd, after all, thought Marie to herself, to be dancing with the man who was giving you the time of your young life, and recalling the man you had grown tired of.

The crisis came at intermission. Half concealed by a screen of palms, Bert threw his arm around Marie's shoulder. That instant, Marie knew. Knew that it was Jim and not Bert who could bring her happiness.

"Take me home at once, Bert," she insisted coldly. "I'm—I'm sick of it." And Bert, inwardly sneering at the girl who wouldn't "play up" as he called it, was forced to acquiesce.

Although the hour was late when Marie found herself at home and alone, it was not too late, she told herself nervously, to find out if Jim was still free—free to become bound again. Quivering, she stood at the telephone.

"Yes—yes—it's Marie. Oh, Jim, could you come over for five minutes? Something to tell you!"

Fifteen minutes later Jim stood in the doorway, and straightway forgot that a waiting taxi outside was running up a steep record. All he realized was that Marie was holding out both arms.

"Do you mean you aren't tired of me, after all, dear?" Jim wanted to be sure.

"Well," and Marie dimpled, "I'd rather be tired of you than of anything else! Oh, Jim!"

REST ON THE SEVENTH DAY

Decree That So Ordained Had Foundation in Deep Wisdom, According to This Writer.

The choice of one day in seven is certainly the wisest that could have been made. However arbitrary it may appear, and may be to a certain extent, to shorten or lengthen work on account of one day, I am nevertheless persuaded that six days are the exact measure of a man's physical powers of endurance, whether in labor or uniform employment. There is something humane, too, in allowing the animals employed in man's service to share in his rest. To lengthen the time between this constantly recurring day of rest would be no less foolish than inhuman, though I once saw the experiment made. When I spent some years in Paris during the time of the Revolution (1792-1805) I witnessed there the abolition of this divine ordinance, in order to establish in its room the dull, dry, decimal system. The tenth day was to be what our Sunday is, and the work went on for nine days consecutively; but when this became evidently too much for the strength many observed Sunday also, at least as far as the police would allow; hence resulted next too much idleness; and thus we always blunder between two extremes when we depart from the regular middle way ordained for us. But if this be the case when merely worldly considerations are taken into account, how much is its importance altered when we see in a religious point of view, which makes the idea as well as the enjoyment of the day a source of spiritual peace and real consolation. —W. Von Humboldt.

Good Luck Charms of Gamblers.

Unusually rich in superstitions are the famous gambling resorts of Deauville and Monte Carlo, and queer are the faiths of the men and women in good luck charms and omens. At Monte Carlo a man and woman appeared at the tables each night, and while the man played, the woman remained seated nursing a black cat for luck.

The man's luck was good at first, but it changed later. To play with the third and fourth fingers of the left hand crossed is a device which one woman affirmed gave her luck, but she could not explain it.

At Deauville a Russian explained his success by admitting that he ate a considerable quantity of almonds for dinner every night. Amethyst tie pins are popular at the gambling resorts because of their alleged luck bringing virtues, and every hunchback that appears on the streets is rubbed against constantly.

Blue Sheep in Shetland.

There are some persons who doubt the existence of blue sheep. In Sir Walter Scott's diary during his tour in the Shetlands is the following:

"We climbed a hill, about three miles from Lerwick, to a cairn, which presents a fine view of the indented coast of the island, and the distant isles of Monsa and others. Unfortunately the day is rather hazy. We returned by a circuitous route, through the same sterile country. These mnirs are used as a commonty by the proprietors of the parishes in which they lie, and each, without any regard to the extent of his peculiar property, puts as much stock upon them as he chooses.

"The sheep are miserable-looking, hairy-legged creatures, of all colors, even to sky blue. I often wondered where Jacob got speckled lambs; I think now they must have been of the Shetland stock."

All the Money She Didn't Get.

A colored minister met one of his flock in the street, a man who had just been married. Rastus was muttering to himself and appeared to be laboring under considerable excitement. So the minister halted him and asked what was the matter.

"Lord!" said Rastus. "It's Mandy Dat 'oman doan' do nothin' but wan money. Yassuh; dat's what it is—money, money, money all de time. It de mohnin', fust t'ing, she ask fo money. When I comes home to dinner she doan' talk nothin' but money, money, money. In the ebenin' it's de same t'ing—wantin' money. Money, money, money—yassuh; nothin' but money."

The minister was sympathetic.

"Well, dat's too bad," he said. "I she' is a cross to have a 'strav'gan wife. What she do wid all dat money?

"Do? I doan' know what she do wi it. I ain't give her none yet."—Everybody's Magazine.

Candy and Stages of Love.

The candy man is the first one t know whether Mr. Newlywed's affe tions are beginning to cool off, accord ing to the New York News. Long be fore even his wife expects it, he i aware of it—and convinced. That i because of the candy Mr. Newlywe buys her. No longer does he come into the store asking for "the "very best candy" and wonder for half a hour whether she will like it in a rib boned or plain container. He walk in and asks for a pound of chocolate —"any kind!" That is the first sig nal.

When several months later he come in and says, "She wants a box of as sorted chocolates," it shows tha things are in a bad way. He is merely repeating her order—and has long since ceased to buy her any candy o his own accord.

WHO WAS THE FIEND?

Story of Flask Spurs Muse to Pity "Uncle Joe"

Mr. Cannon Says After Reading Admirer's "Cannonade" He is Willing to Let the Story Go Uncontradicted.

Washington.—Recent reports that a flask had mysteriously disappeared from "Uncle Joe" Cannon's coat pocket caused H. H. McFarland of St. Louis, one of Uncle Joe's fervent admirers, to burst forth in verse. He wrote what he termed a "cannonade" on the incident as follows:

Who was the fiend, pray let me ask,
Who filched our Uncle Joseph's flask?
The flask he carried on his hip,
From which to take a quiet sip
Of mellow stuff we used to know
In happy days of long ago.
How could one have such little tact
Regardless of the Volstead act?
How could one be so mean and low
To rob our dear Old Uncle Joe?
To rob the widow or a bank
Is bad enough and savors rank;
To rob a graveyard of its dead,
Or take away the orphan's bread
Are crimes we may, perhaps, condone,
If circumstances all were known.
But cursed be he who breaks the lock
To rob us of our private stock.
Or, what is worse, will watch his chance
And steal our liquor from our pants.
And spare us, pray, the crushing blow
Of doing this to Uncle Joe.

"It is a question whether the author owes you an apology," the author wrote Mr. Cannon, "or is deserving of the thanks of congress for what he intends as a slight tribute of respect and affection for its most beloved and honored member. It is his fervent hope that there was no material delay in getting the prescription refilled."

Mr. Cannon replied to the letter as follows:

"I have your favor, with enclosure, and after reading your 'cannonade,' I am willing to let the story go uncontradicted and thank you for your tribute.

"You may have heard that many years ago I gave a promise to the newspaper correspondents in Washington that when they had a good story and no one to father it they might appropriate my name without fear of contradiction. I have had a good many thrust upon me, some of them irritating, but generally the other way, and I reckon the score is in my favor.

"I have a flask—two ounces—presented by my doctor, but knowing the boys in the press gallery as well as in the house, I do not bring it to the capitol, as it would represent neither hospitality nor temptation—scarcely an emergency. That may have been the inspiration for the story. It has, however, served a friendly purpose as an inspiration for the 'cannonade,' and I am again in debt not only to you but to the newspaper fraternity, and I thank you."

WOOD INTO PAPER IN 3 HOURS

Germans Fell Trees and Make Newsprint in Record Breaking Time.

Berlin, Germany.—Trees on which birds warbled their morning song are turned into newsprint paper and sold as midday editions on the same day in certain towns of the Harz district, says the Papierfabrikant, the leading German paper makers' organ.

The exact time taken in the process is 3 hours 25 minutes. The trees were felled at 7:35 a. m., pulped and turned into paper by 9:39, rushed in a motor truck two and one-half miles to the printing office and at 11 o'clock newspaper boys were crying the local sheet on the streets.

Union Hill, N. J.—Mrs. Margaret Gallagher, nineteen, bride of two months, ended a gay night of rounds of Hoboken and Union Hill (N. J.) cabarets in the company of Thomas Cassidy, a suitor before her marriage to Andrew Gallagher, by leaping into the North river from a ferry boat at 5 o'clock in the morning. Cassidy leaped to rescue her and both were drowned.

THOUGHTS OF MOTHER

From the Christian Worker

"The queen that sits upon the throne of home, crowned and sceptered as none other ever can be, is—Mother."

"Her memory is sacred while she lives, and becomes a perpetual inspiration, even when the beautiful flowers bloom above her sleeping dust."

"The name of Mother is one of the most sacred of all connected with human relations. No name is more sweet or precious, or expressive of more important duties or relations."

"There is one vision that never fades from the soul, and that is the vision of mother and of home. No man in all his weary wanderings over goes out beyond the overshadowing arch of mother and home."

"The mother in her office holds the key of the soul; and she it is who stamps the coin of character, and makes the being who would be a savage but for her gentle care, a Christian man.

"Hail, woman! Hail, thou faithful wife and mother, the latest, choicest part of heaven's great plan! None fills thy peerless place at home; no other helpmeet is found for laboring, suffering man."

"She so presents and exemplifies divine truth, that it reproduces itself in the happiest development of childhood—character and life."

"Bishop Hall says he could bless the memory of his mother, who taught him so much divine truth, and gave him so many pious lectures."

"J. S. C. Abbott says that in a college where one hundred and twenty young men were preparing for the ministry, it was found that more than one hundred had been led to Christ by their mothers."

"Mothers, you are the divinely appointed teachers and guides of your children; an attempt to free yourselves from your duty is in direct opposition to the will of God. If you neglect them, the consequences are swift and sure, and how fearful they are, let those broken-hearted mothers tell who have bowed in anguish over their lost sons; who, neglecting them in childhood, have at last seen them dead to every manly virtue."—Selected.

SO READ YOUR BIBLE

And then read your Bible. How cold that sounds! What, read a book to save my soul? Read an old story that my life in these new days shall be regenerated and saved? Yes, do just that, for out of that book, if you read it truly, shall come the divine and human person. If you can read it with your soul as well as with your eyes, there shall come the Christ there walking in Palestine. You shall see Him so much greater than the Palestine in which He walks, that at one word of prayer, as you bend over the illuminated page, there shall lift up that body-being of the Christ, and come down through the centuries and be your helper at your side. So read your Bible.—Phillips Brooks.

Nara is the center of Japan's old civilization, observes a writer in the London Times. White-walled houses among pine trees, white winding roads through rice fields, by pond and river; pear trellises flowering white; peach orchards in blossom, and everywhere cherry trees like pink clouds.

Over a thousand years have passed since Nara was the capital, yet much of the atmosphere created by the seven monarchs who lived there still clings about the place. Its shrines and temples, so wonderfully preserved and restored, attract Japanese pilgrims and visitors from all quarters of the globe; so that its main street, with the tempting displays of lacquer and wood carving, seems always to be celebrating a festival. In cherry season the whole countryside flocks to Nara to picnic under the cryptomerias in Nara park, the extensive lands which once surrounded the monastery of Kefukugi.

If Nara has one spot which visitors can never forget, that spot is the shrine of Kasuga, sacred for centuries to certain of the ancestral gods. The vast vermilion Torii against the tall misty trees, which marks the approach, makes the stranger feel he is indeed on holy ground. But Kasuga in general, owing to its brilliant build-

When Jack Lost His Rudder

By CORONA REMINGTON

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"Yes, I'd love to do it, but father doesn't approve."

"Jack Stamford! Isn't it your $5,000 you want to put into this business, and aren't you of age, and haven't you enough sense to do a little thinking for yourself once in a while? Sometimes you make me so mad I could cry."

Vivian Shippe jumped up from the davenport where she had been sitting beside her fiance and hurriedly dabbed at her eyes as she started toward the door. In one stride he was beside her and had her in his arms.

"Oh, but you don't understand," he pleaded. "I'm all dad has, and he's watched over me and cared for me and advised me ever since I was in kindergarten. It would kill him if I went against his wishes. I always consult him about everything."

"I see you do," she answered dryly.

"That hurts, Vivian," he said quietly.

They were nearer a quarrel than they ever had been, and in a rush of penitence, Vivian put her arms around him.

"Forgive, Jack; I'm a little cat today. I know how hard your position must be, but he isn't fair to you."

"He's wonderful to me. He's the finest father a chap ever had," Stamford defended.

"Well, even if you lost the money I'd rather you'd plunge in and see what you can do for yourself. It looks like a good chance to me even if I don't know much about business."

"I Don't Blame Him."

Almost imperceptibly the man shook his head and sighed. "I don't know what to do; heaven knows I don't. Well, I promised dad I'd be back by ten. He wants a game of chess tonight, and his old crony at the club's gone back on him."

Reluctantly they parted, and Vivian went up to her room more depressed and discouraged than she had been in weeks. What sort of man was Jack's father, anyhow, she wondered. She had not lived in Morristown long, and only knew a few people there, and she had always dodged when Jack had suggested bringing his father around. Somehow she dreaded this man she had never met. He must be an overbearing, domineering sort of creature she reflected, or he wouldn't try to rule his son the way he did.

What could be done to break Jack loose? As things were now he would never be a man. How she would love to tell the old man what she thought of him! As the idea flashed through her mind her lips straightened out into a grim little line of determination.

The next morning at breakfast her family noticed that she seemed to be preoccupied, and just a little excited.

"I'm going uptown," she told her mother, after breakfast.

"What for, dear?"

"Oh, it's a secret mission—some reform work," she answered lightly.

A moment later she was deftly backing the little green car out of the garage and planning her campaign. As she stopped in front of the tall office building her courage almost failed her, but she went bravely in and let the speeding elevator rush her to her destiny.

"Mr. Stamford," she began, as she confronted a rather handsome middle aged man in the president's office of the Longace Iron works, "I'm Vivian Shippe, Jack's fiancee."

"Jack's what? Why, he never told me!" ejaculated Stamford senior.

"I don't blame him," answered the girl, coolly, feeling her composure coming back, "and that's just what I've come here to talk to you about. You are simply ruining Jack. He hardly dares to breathe without your consent, and he has about as much initiative as a three-year-old. He's a mollycoddle, that's what he is, and it isn't his fault, either—it's yours, all yours. You think you're a devoted father, instead of which you're a leech sucking the manhood out of your own son. He has no worse enemy in this whole world than his father."

Stamford, red and spluttering, opened his mouth to speak, but Vivian silenced him with a look and went on:

"He wanted to start out in business for himself, but you discouraged him. What if he did fail and lose a few thousand? I'd rather have a man penniless who had tried and who had a backbone of his own than one who was scared to venture anything. I'm going to marry him because I love him, but I'd almost do it if it was only to save him from you, his devoted father.

"That's all I have to say," she ended. "I don't care how much you hate me—that'll do you good, but think over what I've said, will you?"

With a nod she was gone. Once back in her car an outburst of pent-up emotion swept over her and her hands on the steering wheel trembled so that she could hardly drive. Reaching home, she rushed up the backstairs to her room and locked herself in. Two hours later the telephone rang.

"Say, dearest, got to see you right away. Coming now."

In a flash he had hung up and the girl had just time to dab some powder on her tear-stained face and straighten her tousled hair.

"Whoops! The best news. It's a corker. Dad's a trump—always told you he was—called me up and we just had an interview and he told me he'd reconsidered the matter about my going into business and thought it was a good plan. Just as if that wasn't knockout enough he calmly handed me a check for $10,000 so as to give me a good start."

"What a perfect dear he is!" exclaimed Vivian.

"Yes, but he acted awfully funny. I was a little worried for a while. After we got through he said: 'Son, if you have a best girl or anything of that sort, tell her that love is often blind, but not always incurably so.' I tried to get him to explain, but he just laughed and put out his hand.

"The dear," said Vivian softly. "I believe I'd like to meet him now. I just know I'm going to love him."

The Vacuum Man

By ROSE MEREDITH

© 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

The young man with the vacuum cleaner paused at the foot of the steps and raised his straw hat.

"May I—" he was beginning, when Barbara smiled negatively.

"I am sorry, but we do not need a cleaner," she said pleasantly.

"Everybody needs one of these—that is, every household should have one." He pulled out a little book and studied it carefully. "It removes all the dirt from carpets, stuffed furniture, walls, bedding, curtains, clothing, without leaving a trace of dust behind. It is sanitary, speedy and saving!" He paused breathlessly. "It is very warm today," he apologized, as he drew out an immaculate handkerchief.

"It is, and it must be very exhausting to talk to people and persuade them to buy," said Barbara primly, for she had been taught not to enter into conversation with strangers, and yet he had a very engaging manner and resembled Alice Westerly so strongly that she wanted to ask him if they were related. This was hardly likely, because Alice belonged to a rich and clannish family and all the members of the family were affluent and very prominent.

Barbara was pouring out a glass of lemonade—it was a tall, thin glass, frosty and inviting, with the yellow rind of lemons and a long straw floating on top. She brought the glass to the edge of the porch. "I am sure you must be thirsty," she said, "and it must be hard to sell vacuum cleaners around Meadowbank."

He drained the glass with a little bow as he handed it back. "It is delicious, thank you. Perhaps you will tell me why I cannot sell the cleaners around here."

"Why there are no houses wired for electricity."

"The dickens!" he ejaculated, growing very red. "Anyone but an idiot at the game would have known that before starting out. Who is the local agent for the nearest power station?"

"My father. He has tried to interest the people, but they cling to their oil stoves and heaters and lights. There is gas in the village."

"Thank you. I am going to talk to your father. If I can persuade some of the people to petition for electric service, then I'll come back in a month and sell cleaners to them. Will you save your order for me?"

"Of course," laughed Barbara. And, with a businesslike air he lifted his canvas package, raised his hat and strode down the bricked walk to the white gate.

It was pleasant, sitting there on the porch, looking down the red path between the sweet-scented boxes and watching the man's straight form stepping briskly down the road toward the village. She hoped her father would do business with the stranger. She rather liked him for his gentle courtesy, his evident refinement, and she may have woven him into her day dreams as she waited for her friends to come for a cup of tea and a bit of girlish chatter.

Alice Westerly came first, and she was plaintively indignant. "I thought I would never get away," she complained as she stirred her tea. "Mother had a letter from her sister this morning and Aunt Lettie is all upset, and we talked about the matter until I feel that I never want to see another vacuum cleaner in the world."

"Vacuum cleaner?" murmured Barbara feebly, her brown eyes started. "Why—why talk about vacuum cleaners on a pretty day like this?"

"Why not talk about them? My cousin, Rod Marvin, has gone on the road selling them—not as a wholesale proposition, but just a house-to-house canvass; he's an agent—some day he will come to your house," she added, gloomily.

"I hope so!"

"Why? Because he is handsome and rich?" asked Alice bluntly.

"Rich? His father is the head of the whole industry. Like most rich men's sons, Rod is learning the business from the ground up. He can make 'em, he says, and now they have put him in the sales department, of which one day he is to be the head. Uncle Dick says Rod will make good. Aunt Lettie says her poor boy must not be humiliated, and we think Rod's a good sport!"

"He really is—and I hope he will succeed," declared Barbara, as she poured another cup of tea.

"He has the most captivating manner—he could charm the birds from the trees, and he could make any woman buy a cleaner, whether she wanted it or not!"

"He couldn't persuade me to buy one," retorted Barbara.

"Barby! Did he come here?" Alice caught her friend's little hands and held them captive.

"About an hour ago," confessed Barbara, her cheeks hot.

"How funny! And you thought he was a real agent and turned him away?" giggled Alice.

"I sent him to father—he was very courteous—and—nice. I gave him a glass of iced lemonade—there, that's all!" Barbara was furious with herself for blushing, with Alice for her inane giggling and above all with Rodney Marvin, who was beginning at the bottom by selling vacuum cleaners. "And I hate vacuum cleaners!" she burst forth viciously.

Voices sounded from the hall and three people came into the veranda—Barbara's parents and Mr. Rodney Marvin, cool, calm, immaculate.

"Thank you, Mrs. Greye," he was saying, "your order shall be the first one on my book," and he scribbled in a new notebook, while all of them looked at him with varied degrees of interest.

Mrs. Greye thought he was a promising young business man. Her husband coveted him as a partner in his business. Alice Westerly thought Rodney was very "nervy" to invade the homes of the well-to-do and make himself so thoroughly one of them while he concealed his identity.

What did Barbara think? She never told anyone for many months, and when she did speak—she told Rodney.

And on the day of the wedding the electric current was turned into the town of Meadowbank, and it is safe to calculate that in every household there was a Marvin vacuum cleaner.

The Closing Day Exercises of the Daily Vacation Bible School will be held in the Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church, Friday evening, August 11th. Exhibits of hand work by the children will be given, also a program will be rendered. All parents and friends are cordially invited to attend.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Ham, South Burgess avenue, started Wednesday on a motor trip to New York City and way points. They expect to be gone a week.

Mrs. Earl B. Goodchild (Kittie Moss) and her daughter, Ellen Faye, will return to their home in Detroit, Mich., Saturday, after a visit of four weeks with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Moss, 138 South Ogden avenue, and other relatives.

Mrs. C. E. Moss, Mrs. Ray Caldwell, Mrs. H. J. Moss, Mrs. Earl Goodchild and daughter Ellen, of Detroit, Mich., and Mrs. Martin Markwood and children, Mawean and Charles, of Detroit, Mich, motored to Kingston, Ohio, and spent the day with relatives there last Thursday.

AT LAST A WEEKLY DAY OFF

Japanese Department Store Starts Giving Clerks Hebdomadal Rest.

Tokyo, Japan.—The clerks of Japan, who heretofore have had few if any holidays during the year, are hoping much from the inauguration of a weekly rest day by a large department store of Osaka.

The Tokyo chamber of commerce and other bodies have taken the matter up with a view to the adoption of a similar system here where there are a number of large department stores conducted on American lines.

Heretofore the stores have remained open seven days a week the year around, and the employees have had a few days at New Year's and during the feast of the head in summer.

Wife Hurt in Jump From Auto.

Waterford, Conn.—Mrs. John Phillips of Hartford is a determined woman. While motoring with her husband, she told him he would have to let her drive or she would jump out. He refused, and she jumped. Her skull was broken.

All for Art's Sake

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(©, 1926, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

When he saw Miss Constance Rood sitting in her big chair on the front porch of the white cottage, Linn Mowbray pushed open the gate and strode up the bricked path and sat down on the steps. As he laid his hat down Miss Constance noticed that his good-looking young face was anxious.

"How is everything at the bank, Linn?" she asked him, knitting away at another gay sweater for her pretty niece, Jean.

"Fine—I am in line for promotion soon—Mr. Day is leaving the first of the month." The momentary enthusiasm died out of his face and he reddened. "Have—you heard—from—er—Jean lately, Miss Constance?"

"Last night—here is the letter—read it if you like, my dear," said Jean's aunt, as she gave him a bulky envelope. She knitted busily as he read and re-read the pages. At last he gave them back to her. "Thank you," he murmured.

"Razzanti has told her she has the soul of a housewife—and—confound it all, Miss Rood, I'm not fit to talk to any one tonight!"

"My poor boy," sympathized Miss Constance; "I really believe, Linn, that I understand Jean thoroughly—have I not been mother and father to her since her childhood? This painting notion will soon wear away and she will come home disillusioned and settle down. Meantime she is happy. Can't you wait a little longer?"

"I'll try to, Miss Constance—you're such a good sport yourself—I know you miss her—see you later—" He jammed on his hat and rushed out of the gate. As he tramped down the road his doggedly planted feet seemed to pound out unanswerable questions. "If Jean is really happy, why does she write so wistfully of the garden and the home folks in Elmdale? If she is a genius, why is she not absorbed in her painting? If Razzanti, the painting master, really told her she would succeed, why had she cried? If she didn't care for the work why not come home and marry him?" Certainly those were tear blisters on the thick, creamy pages of her letter!

"The next holiday I'll go down and find out," he muttered at last.

What really happened was this: The temperamental Razzanti had given Jean her sixth lesson. His greedy eye had noted the lean leather wallet as it went back into her hand-bag after she had paid him. She tried to arrange terms with him—perhaps he would wait for payment of the next lesson until she had sold a small still-life study of flowers and a basket of vegetables.

"Sell? You-a sell that? Anysing? Ha!" He paced the dusty studio with increasing wrath that one so unworthy should take up his valuable time. "That-a daub? Looks like tomat can—bah!" He shook his fat fingers at her in rage and Jean with her things clutched to her breast hastened to leave the place. As she went down the stairs to the hot street, Razzanti put his head out of his door and hissed one word after her.

"Saprist!"

Jean turned furiously. In Elmdale one did not specialize in other than Latin, Greek or French. But her tongue trembled for speech. "S-s-pa-ghetti!" she hissed back at him and had the last word.

Back in her room at the boarding house, she washed her brushes and cleaned up her painting boxes with tear-blind eyes. She was giving up a long-cherished plan—her life's ambition. She had saved the money little by little and Razzanti's exorbitant charges had absorbed her scanty capital. She had learned little for he was but a huge fraud, and had been sought through an advertisement. She could not go home to Elmdale without money—and there was Linn Mowbray to face. How every one would laugh at her for a failure! That evening after a meager dinner at a funny little tea shop, she told her story to the kind-hearted girl who sat at the desk.

"That's a shame, Miss Rood—honestly, I wish I knew how to help you. You wouldn't want to wait on the tables, now?"

"Yes, I would, and thank you," cried delighted Jean.

In a few days the girl discovered that Jean could make fluffy muffins and cup cakes that would melt in a hungry customer's mouth, and so Jean was promoted and the patronage of the tea shop increased wonderfully. Soon she had charge of the cooking and gradually her pile of savings increased.

One day, behind the dainty blue screen, where Jean was concocting a delicious salad, she heard the sound of vaguely familiar voices. Through a peephole she saw two of Elmdale's prominent matrons, seated at the table next to her screen. Those voices made her homesick.

"Yes, Jennie," Mrs. Grey was saying as she buttered one of Jean's muffins, "Mr. Day has left the bank and all the clerks have been promoted—it's a fine thing for Linn Mowbray—he's been rather interested in my Dorothy, and holding that position in the bank makes it quite all right now."

"I thought Linn was engaged to Constance Rood's niece—Jean Rood. I haven't seen her for months."

"Somewhere in the city here—studying art; they say she has considerable talent. I suppose she wants to devote her life to art—these modern girls—" Mrs. Grey sighed and took another muffin. "A culinary artist made these muffins," she added.

"Yes," agreed her friend. "And be sure and let me know—if Dorothy does become engaged—I shall want to send her something very special for her trousseau."

Jean, very white and grave, finished her work for the day. Then she obtained a few days' leave of absence and went to Elmdale. She arrived at twilight and walked down the street, drinking in the beauty of the familiar scenes, hearing the evening song of the thrush and the orchard oriole. She passed the Grey home and heard young voices in the screened veranda, and wondered if Linn had transferred his allegiance to Dorothy, the girl who stayed at home.

Miss Constance was sitting in her little porch when Jean opened the gate. She arose with a glad cry and went down the path to meet the homesick girl. Some one else arose from the shadows and took her out of the older woman's arms.

"Linn!" cried Jean. "I have come to stay."

"Great—our little house is almost finished. Can you cook, dear?"

"Have you forgotten so soon?" she quavered. "Tell him, Aunt Connie, that I can co-ok everything except s-spaghetti!"

HAD THREE LEADING OBJECTS

Definite Results Which the Alchemists of Old Vainly Sought for Many Centuries.

The three chief objects of alchemy were the discovery of a process by which the baser metals might be transmuted into gold and silver, the discovery of an elixir by which life might be prolonged indefinitely, and the manufacture of an artificial process of human life.

A homunculus, or artificial man, was made by Paracelsus, according to legend. A recipe for making one in a glass phial which had a transparent body was given. But by feeding this creature for 40 days with human blood, it was stated that a smaller exemplar of a real human being would result.

The transmutation of metals was to be accomplished by a powder, stone or elixir often called the philosopher's stone, the application of which would turn baser metals into gold or silver, according to the length of application.

The heydey of alchemy was between the Seventh and Sixteenth centuries, after which time it lost ground. Spain during the Moorish period was the repository of alchemical lore. Modern chemistry derived many of its names from this pseudo-science.

Beginnings of Trial by Jury.

Trial by jury was the practice among the barbarians of the forests of Germany more than 2,000 years ago. It was common among American Indians before they were disorganized by contact with the white man. The Saxon invaders from Germany carried trial by jury to England, and were ever ready to defend it with their blood. The Danish invasion caused its abolition for a time, but the tyranny, oppression and injustice which followed, caused the people of England to re-establish it as soon as they had driven the Danes from their coast.

MANY VISIT SULPHUR SPRINGS

Waters in Platt National Park Have for Years Been Noted for Their Curative Properties.

In southern Oklahoma, not far from the Texas boundary, a group of 30 healing springs, these of cold, sparkling water, were set apart by congress in 1904 under the title of the Platt National park. Most of them are sulphur springs; others are impregnated with bromides and other mineral salts, the Detroit News states.

Many thousands yearly visit the bordering city of Sulphur to drink these waters; many camp in or near the reservation; the bottled waters bring relief to thousands at home.

All these Platt springs, like those at Hot Springs, Ark., were known to the Indians for their curative properties for many generations before the coming of the white settler.

According to a Chickasaw legend, two warriors competed for the hand of Deerfoot, a chieftain's daughter. Both were killed by jumping off a cliff. Then Deerfoot also jumped and killed herself. The chief on the hilltop cried so many briny tears that, according to Indian tradition, they filtered down through the cliff and mingled with the spring water, to which they imparted remedial qualities.

None of Apple Wasted.

The thoroughness with which the apple is now worked over and utilized by some manufacturers makes it comparable with the packing-house pig that leaves only a futile squeal. The apple is not transformed into such a variety of products as the pig, but all are useful, and when the last of the series has been made hardly a smell is left.

In many of the apple-using factories the apples are first pressed to produce cider, which may be sold as such or may be manufactured into vinegar. After thorough pressing the pomace is treated with hot water to remove the pectin, which, after purification, is sold in either liquid form to manufacturers of jellies and similar products and to housewives. The much-wasted and squeezed residue is dried, ground, and sold as cattle feed.

On the Farm.

Once the farmer swathed his wheat with the cradle and raked and bound it by hand. Then the horse-drawn reaper appeared, then the McCormick binder, and, finally, the great mechanical tractors of the present, each of which haul two binders. Once, also the antiquated flail "resounded from morning to night" on the best of the farms. Then horses were used to tread the straw, and then came the treadmill thresher, the last of which went out some 15 years ago. Today tractor threshers do the work.—Exchange.

Flowers and Confectionery

By FLORENCE MELLISH

(©, 1925, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"I wish you didn't have to go, Lucy. My mind misgives me."

"Why, Aunt Miriam! Mr. Heath has coached me until I couldn't make a mistake in the accounts. Besides, working for Uncle Clifford won't be like going into a stranger's office, and I'll have a nice home with him and Aunt Louise." Lucy Eldredge lifted her glowing face to the anxious, austere, but kindly face of her great-aunt.

The two were standing on the brick walk in front of the white-pillared, brick mansion that had sheltered three generations of Eldredges. Just behind them stood faithful old Abby. The old house, standing in its neglected garden, had somehow an air of dignity and distinction. Lucy was waiting for the wagon which was to take her and her trunk to the station.

"It isn't your work that worries me, Lucy, but you're going into a new world, and you are so young and so pretty."

"Why, Aunt Miriam! I'm almost twenty, and," glancing down at her graceful, becomingly draped figure, "I'm glad I'm pretty—at least, I should be if I were."

"Lucy," said Miss Eldredge severely, "don't prevaricate. You know that you are. Your Aunt Louise is a good woman according to her light, but she wasn't brought up an Eldredge, and she is frivolous sometimes."

Lucy did not look altogether dismayed. "Mr. Moriarty's coming."

"But, Lucy, I think I can trust you. You'll never forget that you are an Eldredge. We may be poor now, but we still have our traditions. You'll remember the rules I have given you?"

"But it's a Brooch."

"I couldn't forget them," cried Lucy, "and I'll not only remember them, I'll keep them," she finished earnestly.

"Louise's nephew, Neal Barrett, is often there, and his college friends. I'm afraid they're a harem-scarem set, sadly lacking the old-fashioned virtues."

Lucy's face did not reflect her aunt's perturbation.

"But they'll never notice a poor little country girl like me."

Miss Eldredge's gaze was skeptical as it rested on the girl's glowing beauty.

"But you will be discreet, Lucy?"

"I'll be the discreetest ever. Mr. Moriarty has put the trunk in and I must run. Good-by, dear Aunt Miriam, don't worry. Good-by, Abby, don't let her worry."

Lucy's trimly shod foot was on the wagon step when Miss Eldredge called, "Come back one moment, dear. There is one thing I forgot."

Lucy tripped back for a parting admonition, then half laughed to herself as she ran down the walk. "But I'm not likely to get either."

* * * * * * *

Lucy was happy in her new life. Her uncle was lenient, her aunt was kind. Neal Barrett was often at the house, and at first he did bring his college friends. After a little he usually came alone. He was eager to give Lucy a good time and to take her to plays and concerts. Her aunt would have sent the two alone sometimes, but Lucy would say, "But I can't go without a chaperon. What would Aunt Miriam say?"

Aunt Louise laughed. "Oh, you Eldredges!"

"Of course I'm an Eldredge, and noblesse oblige."

On Lucy's birthday there were parcels and boxes beside her plate at breakfast. She opened one with a little scream of delight.

"That's Neal's gift," said Aunt Louise.

Lucy's eyes were wistful. "This sapphire pendant would have been perfect with my blue gown. And this exquisite silver chain! It's all so lovely I could cry."

"But what is the matter with it?" asked her aunt, perplexed.

"Aunt Miriam made me promise the last thing not to accept gifts from young men. You wouldn't have me break my word, Aunt Louise? And, besides, it would be wrong, anyway."

"Perhaps, but Neal will be disappointed."

"Oh, Auntie, will you explain to him? I'm sorry to hurt him when he has been so kind."

"Don't grieve about it, dearie. I'll telephone him by and by."

Neal came to dinner looking a little aggrieved.

"Now, Lucy, we must have this out," he insisted. "Just what did your aunt say? Don't prevaricate after all your Puritan training. Did she say you must accept nothing?"

"She said nothing"—Lucy hesitated—"except—"

"Except what?" he demanded.

"Books, flowers and confectionery," she faltered.

"Then I needn't be quite a bear on this day of days. There's a box of flowers in the hall. I hadn't quite the nerve to bring them in. And look out for candy tomorrow."

Aunt Louise laughed as she helped Lucy arrange the rich masses of heliotrope. "Do you know the language of flowers?"

"No," Lucy answered. "Aunt Miriam said no well-bred young lady would pay attention to anything so foolish, but," bending down and drawing in a deep breath, "aren't they sweet?"

Lucy blushed over the heart-shaped bonbons that came in the morning and hid the card on which Neal had written "Sweets to the sweet."

Flowers and boxes of sweets came often now, and when Neal came for a week-end he brought a book. "Your Aunt Miriam will like you to read poetry," he said.

Lucy glowed over the creamy pages, but shrank a little at the title, "Because I Love You."

"I don't know," she murmured.

"But, Lucy, anthologies are very popular just now, and my cousin Robert, who is a terrible highbrow, calls this one of the best."

He came for another week-end with a beaming face.

"Flowers are perishable things, but here is one that will last. Isn't this a daisy?"

"But it's a brooch."

"Just a flower," he insisted.

It was a marguerite; the centre was of unwrought gold, and the rays were formed of tiny pearls. Lucy regarded it through wistful tears and shook her head.

"Please don't tempt me. I would be very wrong to deceive dear Aunt Miriam like that—worse than an out-and-out lie, I think."

Neal set the box on a table and took Lucy by the shoulders. "Lucy, look at me. Aren't you deceiving me—keeping back a part of the truth? Just what did your aunt say?"

She began glibly: "'Promise me to accept no gift from any young man except books, flowers and confectionery, unless—'" She reddened and stopped.

"Unless what?"

Two of the tears fell. "I think you're horrid," she quivered.

He did not relent. "Unless what?"

"Unless you are engaged," she finished, with a little show of defiance.

"Is that all? There isn't another man in the way?"

"Oh, no!"

"This one poor little brooch! And I've been longing to give you the earth. The shops are full of things just made for you. We'll go down to Eastford together and ask Aunt Miriam's consent. I'll take my pedigree along. Why, sweetheart, I've as many Mayflower ancestors as she has."

The Pride of Parents

What pride is felt by parents in the honest success of their boys. How they like to hear of his good and manly behavior in school, in the counting-house, or on deck, where lives are to be saved or liberty preserved! That parent has lived to some purpose who has his children rooted and grounded in sound principles. Equipping well the son or daughter for the voyage of life, is a duty the neglect of which is sure to entail sorrow and shame.

When a minister's boy goes wrong, the whole world is informed of the fact with apparent glee, by those who have no taste for things religious. It is clearly expected, then, that the minister's family, like himself, should be living epistles, known and read of all men. Then, again, when the son or daughter of a religious family mingles freely with worldlings in the ball-room and at the theatre, the finger of reproach is justly pointed at Christ's followers, and the majority are held responsible for the acts or neglects of a few. Religion and science unite in positive language, that the defects of the parents are discoverable in the children.

The only cure for this disorder—whatever it may be—is the grace of God, the love and friendship of Jesus.

The parent, then—father or mother—who is conscious of dangerous proclivities, occupies vantage ground above every other teacher, however qualified, in dealing with his child. He knows the besetting sin, and with heaven's aid, can overcome it. Those parents who leave the education of their children almost altogether to sacred or secular teacher, have intrusted the most important business of life to hands not fully competent to discharge it.

The good housewife bestows much care upon the curtains, the carpets, the pictures, and the statuary within the home; while the sons and daughters, with bad books, impure associates, and misleading plays, are gradually drifting. If not already there, on to dangerous ground.

It is proper to remind these drowsy parents that stains on pictures and dirt on curtains are minor evils, unjustifiable as they are, compared with the unmanly act of the boy or the frivolous amusements of the daughter.

We are safe in assuming that the parents of Joseph, Samuel, and Timothy, were of superior stock. Grace makes magnificent pictures when it lodges in good, natural soil, in which there are, as we are taught, various degrees. Parents who expect noble children must themselves live noble lives. In time, and sooner the better, we will attach more value to the law of heredity. We will then try to do much for posterity by bequeathing blood and habits that will help and not hinder the race.

Nice families! What a comfort and ornament they are to society! There are pleasant homes with the poets and others with orators, but the greatest joy is evening at home with cultured people who know much of divine things, whose lives are attuned to words that cheer and deeds that enoble.

You are sure to find in such homes grandmotherly and motherly influence modeled after that which made Timothy an example for all the ages. We are not doing enough in the right direction for our children. If we would have more fragrance and fruit we must prune and pray, beginning within and working outward.—Author Unknown.

HAS VARIETY OF MEANINGS

In Continental Europe, Bunch of Straw Speaks "Little Language of Its Own."

The bunch of straw in Continental Europe has as many meanings as a Chinese word. It is quite a little language in itself. When seen in the midst of a field tied to a post far from human habitation it is a warning against trespass. The peasant knows that he will be arrested or punished if found within the boundaries of a field so marked, for the field has been lately sown with seed. Woe to the sportsman or traveler who fails to understand this sign language.

A small upright sign scarcely ever more than two feet long and much like a miniature torpedo boat standing on end is not a cigar, as the first glance would cause one to suppose. To be sure, it hangs outside a cigar shop and resembles a bad imitation of a cigar, but is in truth shaped and tied about like the original packages of tobacco brought to the country.

These packages, called "civettes," were of a given size, were large in the middle and tapering towards the ends. Such signs originated when many of those who had learned to smoke had not learned to read.

Red lights, which shine from afar at night, show to all smokers how they can replenish their stock. But the unwary stranger may bring up some night in the police station, for the red light is not only a sign of the tobacconist, but of the watchhouse as well.—New York Herald.

Colony of Georgia.

Georgia, the thirteenth colony, was founded in the spirit of benevolence for the poor. The laws of England permitted imprisonment for debt. Thousands of English laborers, who through misfortune and thoughtless contracts had become indebted to the rich, were annually arrested and thrown into jail. Whole families were destitute or starving. To provide a refuge for these downtrodden poor of England and the distressed Protestants of other countries, James Oglethorpe, the philanthropist, a member of parliament, appealed to George II for the privilege of planting a colony in America. The petition was favorably heard and June 9, 1732, a royal charter was issued by which the territory between the Savannah and Altamaha rivers, and westward from the upper fountains of those rivers to the Pacific, was organized and granted to a corporation for twenty-one years, to be held in trust for the poor. In honor of the king of England the province was named Georgia.

U. S. EXPLAINS $108 WARDROBE

This Sum Will Provide for Evening Gowns and Business Frocks, Says Bureau.

TELLS HOW EASY IT ALL IS

Series of Pamphlets Issued by Department of Agriculture Calculated to Reduce High Cost of Clothing.

Washington.—Uncle Sam, besides occupying himself with strikes, law enforcement and international agreements, has interested himself in woman's clothes.

How to have a wardrobe for $108 that includes dinner and evening gowns, a smart business dress, frocks of voile and tissue, gingham for summer wear and a broadcloth coat for winter winds, is explained in a series of pamphlets issued by the Department of Agriculture, as an aid in reducing the high cost of clothing. One of these pamphlets declares that the business girl with a reasonable amount of zeal and talent, can use part of her spare time to such effect that her clothing bill is cut in half.

First she must send to the Department of Agriculture for the circulars issued by the department. One of these pamphlets explains how to make a dress form by pasting layers of gummed bundle wrapping paper over a tightly fitting vest on herself, as a model. When the paper casing is cut off and fastened together she has a "light, stiff and perfect reproduction of her form." This eliminated the purchase of a store figure.

Employee Used Form.

The girl with the $108 wardrobe, a government employee, used such a form.

She made for $24.61 a coat of tan broadcloth with a good lining, such as she saw priced at $50 in shops. A blue voile dress with a slip, cost, including trimming, $11.09. A tissue gingham dress, with organdie and hemstitching for trimming, cost $6.33; with scraps and a remnant she made another gingham dress for exactly 45 cents.

For $16 she bought materials to make a pussy willow taffeta and georgette crepe dress for social occasions, which she said, she could not duplicate at a store for less than $35. Her business dress of serge and crepe de chine would have been priced at $40 or more if she had purchased a dress of the same quality of material already made. Her evening dress of taffeta and silver lace cost $21, although it was modeled after one seen in a shop priced several times higher.

Attended Many Affairs.

This wardrobe, supplemented by two dresses for which materials were purchased, brought the total up to $108.34.

"This wardrobe, while not elaborate, enabled me to attend many affairs which, had I not sewed myself, I would have been unable to attend because of lack of a proper gown. Without the dress form I could not have done it in the time at my disposal. I made ten such forms for my friends, too."

PLATYPUS COMING TO AMERICA

Singular Mammal That Lays Eggs, on Way to Philadelphia Zoo From Australia.

Philadelphia.—The zoological gardens in Fairmount park are being prepared for the accommodation of a number of new guests, now on their way here from Australia. The most unusual of the shipment is a platypus, an egg-laying mammal.

The platypus will be the only one of its kind in this country, it is said. This species dies quickly in captivity and is related to the echidna, also an egg-laying mammal. However, the local gardens have exhibited one specimen of the echidna for eighteen years. This shipment is being sent by Ellis C. Joseph, Australian zoologist.

SEEK GOLD IN OFFICE SMOKE

United States to Filter Clouds From Wall Street Assay Building for Saving.

New York.—Thousands of dollars' worth of gold and silver which now goes up in smoke each year through the stack of the United States assay office in Wall street is going to be saved by the government. A dispatch stated that work has been started on the installation of the Cottrell electrical precipitation equipment. Through this equipment there will be recovered suspended particles of precious metal from the gases arising from smelting and refining operations.

The gases which will be treated will pass up flues provided for the purpose, to the precipitation plant. Superintendent Isaac H. Smith, who has been conducting tests, believed that there will be a saving in the recovery of gold and silver of from $8 to $9,000 a year net.

LEGEND QUIETS FEAR

Volcanic Activities Fail to Disturb Older Hawaiians.

Remember Ancient Legendary Agreement in Which Pele, Goddess of the Volcano, Promised to Withhold the Lava.

Hilo, Island of Hawaii, T. H.—Recent volcanic activity in the ancient pits of Makopuhi, Hanau and Napau, which have been "dead" since 1840, drained much of the lava that had made Halemaumau, the vast inner crater of the Kilauea volcano, so spectacular, and caused much fear that the lava would flow toward the sea and inundate the little villages of Kalapana, Panau and Puau.

The older generation of Hawaiians, however, entertained no such fear, for they remembered an ancient legendary agreement that had been made by Pele, goddess of the volcano, with Kama Puua, the Hawaiian pig god, by which Pele promised her lava would never flow through Hilo or Puua to the sea.

Pele and Kama Puua had an argument and Kama Puua went to Halemaumau, Pele's home, to fight it out. The god and goddess fought until Pele was overcome, and she pleaded for peace, according to the legend.

"We shall have peace if you promise never to allow your lava to flow through Puua or Hilo to the sea," Kama Puua said. Pele assented, and she has never broken the promise, fearing a return of the hated Kama Puua, the legend said.

In 1880, when a lava flow was proceeding toward Hilo and threatened to destroy the city, the Princess Ruth came from Honolulu here and, standing near the flow, reminded Pele of her promise and her danger from Kama Puua if she broke the agreement. The flow stopped immediately, according to the older Hawaiians.

On several other occasions Pele has sent her red-hot rivers in the direction of Puua and Hilo, but they have never reached the two places.

The last activity, resulting from an underground flow from Halemaumau that broke out at Makaopuhi, 11 miles down the great southeast rift that leads from Kilauea, has changed he appearance of Kilauea, Hawaii's greatest scenic attraction, tremendously, according to persons now at the crater.

It is now possible during favorable wind shifts to approach close to the pit-rim in what was known as Pele's oven.

Although the pit of Kilauea shows no activity, volcano observers say that "she is not dead, only sleeping."

QUEEN MOTHER DEFIES TIME

Alexandra of Britain Active in Spite of Her 77 Years—Puts in Busy Day.

London, England.—Queen Alexandra, the queen mother, now in her seventy-eighth year, is far more active than most women of her age. She might take life far more easily than she does, but she evidently is opposed to the idea of being laid on the shelf. She likes to show herself among the people, and she is gratified by the applause with which her appearance always is greeted. Undoubtedly it acts as a sort of psychological tonic upon her and helps her to feel as young as she looks.

She crowds many activities into a day. One day recently she appeared in public at the cart-horse parade for prizes in Regent's park, then at a concert in aid of workshops for disabled soldiers and, finally, at the Richmond horse show.

She makes, however, two concessions to advancing years. She seldom goes out of an evening, and she goes to bed early, usually playing a game of "Patience" before retiring.

MAN, PLOWING, KILLS BEAR

Mississippi Rancher Has Chance Encounter With Vagrant From Canebrakes.

Coldwater, Miss.—A bear weighing 250 pounds was killed by Dock Lee, a farmer, living near Arkabutla in the western part of this county. Mr. Lee was plowing in his field about a mile from town when his dog encountered the bear in a thicket nearby.

Great excitement resulted in the neighborhood, as it was the first bear ever seen out of the canebrakes, the nearest of which is three miles away. This bear is supposed to have been in the vicinity of Arkabutla for some time, as his tracks had been discovered on several occasions by citizens of the community.

Hoof Shoes for Moonshiner.

Tampa, Fla.—In order to throw prohibition agents off the trail to moonshine stills, a Florida moonshiner has invented a shoe that leaves an imprint similar to that of the hoof of a cow. A. L. Allen, federal prohibition commissioner for Florida, announced recently. One of the hoof-shoes was found at a still captured near Port Tampa, Allen said, and it will be forwarded to Commissioner Blair at Washington.

Warsaw, Ind.—Thomas Ross, Winona Lake, placed $100 in bills and several checks inside one of his shoes for safekeeping. Then he went to Florida and forgot all about the bills and checks.

While repairing a pair of shoes for Ross, a Warsaw cobbler discovered the greenbacks and checks and turned them over to the owner.

Camping Party Uses Hearse for Bedroom

Frank Remlinger of Green Bay, Wis., and four friends, on a camping jaunt, use a hearse instead of the usual type of motor caravan. Only a few changes were necessary. Part of the glass side was replaced by board panels and a flooring was put in, dividing it into decks. Two of the party sleep "upstairs," and all supplies are carried below. Three of the party sleep in tents.

Rubber tires insure easy riding. No ghosts have been encountered so far, even when they camp next to a cemetery, and no matter how it storms, the hearse is snug.

State Hospital Barn Burns

One of the most spectacular fires in recent months occurred in the stable at the state hospital on West Broad street at 8 o'clock last Saturday night and caused a loss to the building and grain stored there of $11,000.

Fire department officials were unable to determine the origin of the blaze, which spread rapidly in the dry lofts of the structure, but believe it was due to defective electric wiring.

Trusties working in the stable rescued the two horses, and brought out the four automobiles, property of hospital attaches. A quantity of hay was also removed from the loft, but oats and other grains stored there were lost.

The stable, which is situated to the northwest of the main structure, was three stories in height. It was built of brick. The flames left nothing standing but the walls.

The following contributions have been received recently for the Columbus baby camp: 42 napkins from "Our Sewing Circle," 14 napkins, 35 dresses and 17 wash clothes made by a woman past 80 years of age from the Indianola Sewing circle, five baby slips from the Chi Omega Alumnae club, 14 napkins from Mrs. James McJ. Phillips, 32 West Woodruff avenue; three pairs of shoes, a pair of sandals, three pairs of hose, four dresses, three pairs of pants and a suit from "a friend," and 140 napkins, 12 quilts, six dresses and five skirts from the Independent Needleworkers.

A group of 10 children gave a lawn fete at 1309 Oak street Thursday evening for the benefit of the baby camp and earned $4.15. They have given two previous similar affairs this summer, raising $9 at one and $5 at the other.

The West Side residents came through Saturday afternoon with their 100 per cent contribution to the success of the second annual baby camp lawn fete, in the shape of a check for $1000, signed by Harry A. Parrett, who had charge of rallying to the aid of the project. The generous contribution, resulting from the sale of tickets to the lawn fete to West Siders, will be turned into the lawn fete fund.

The members of the Wissalohican Club have been enjoying their new summer cottages on Big Darby the past two weeks. They now have nine cottages. They are located on the west bank of Big Darby at the Jacob High Bridge and occupy a tract of about 5½ acres. Many improvements have been made and others will be made to make this one of the best places of its kind in the locality.

Those having cottages are J. W. Young, Charles Fleming, Pete Smith, C. E. Helmbrecht, William Engard, W. B. Link, Bill Link, Avery Hirschner and Jacob Link.

Mr. Helmbrecht and family returned from there the first of this week. Mrs. J. W. Young and family are enjoying it this week. Mr. Bill Link is also enjoying his cottage at present.

HOLMES LIBRARY OFFERED TO HILLTOP

32,00 volumes offered to the Hilltop as a gift, in memory of the late Col. J. T. Holmes

The Hilltop public should deem itself indeed fortunate to be the recipient of so valuable a gift, as the library of the late Col. Holmes, to be known as the Holmes Memorial.

This library now lies idle in storage in the Glenwood Shelter House, and nothing has been done toward providing funds for its maintainance or removal to a settled and central location for its use by the Hilltop residents.

The value of this library is well known throughout the state, and several colleges have tried to secure it for their own usage.

Mrs. Karl T. Weber, Mrs. Lafayette Woodruff and Mrs. C. E. Sharp, who are boosters of the plan, think that this library should be made available to the West Side, and especially to the Hilltop, as we have none. To this end, they have asked that the matter be brought up for discussion at the next meetings of the various Parent-Teacher's associations and Welfare organizations of the West Side.

The Hilltop Chamber of Commerce now has the project before them for consideration and development.

Col. J. T. Holmes, who was formerly a member of the Columbus Bar Association, was always in sympathy with and interested in the West Side. It is for this reason that his heirs have offered these books to this section of the city.

Would it not be fitting and proper for us to get together and discuss ways and means for the upkeep of this noble gift, which has been so generously offered?

U. S. UNIVERSITY IN CENTRAL EUROPE

Suggested by Dr. Stepanek as Promoting World Peace.

SPREAD AMERICAN CULTURE

World Union of Engineers Also Advocated in Line With Marconi's Suggestion of Promoting Peace Through Science.

Washington.—Establishment in central Europe of a great American university and library is urged by Dr. B. Stepanek, minister to the United States from Czechoslovakia, who, to advance international peace, calls upon the engineers of this and other countries for united participation in world affairs. Doctor Stepanek makes an appeal for the formation of a world federation of engineers, and for an international engineering conference to deal constructively with the problems of civilization.

Doctor Stepanek's views, made public by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, which, through its official journal, stresses the need of engineering solidarity among the leading nations, are regarded by engineers as a significant diplomatic utterance supporting the efforts now being made in America, Great Britian, France and Italy to bring about closer relations among engineers.

Closer Relations Among Engineers.

Award of the John Fritz medal to Senator Guglielmo Marconi has aroused fresh interest in the idea of a world union of engineers. Marconi's expressed hope of promoting peace through science coincides, it was said, with action to devise a working plan of international co-operation between the engineers of America and Italy.

John W. Lieb, vice president of the New York Edison company, has reported, after a trip to Italy, that Italian engineers are ready to form such an alliance. Herbert Hoover, Prof. Comfort A. Adams of Harvard university Eugene Schneider of Paris and Sir Robert A. Hadfield of London are others who favored advancement of world peace through the united action of men of science. Actively backing the project also are the presidents of the American Society of Civil Engineers, American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, American Institute of Electrical Engineers and the Federated American Engineering Societies.

Alfred D. Flinn, secretary of the engineering foundation and chairman of the engineering division of the National Research council, indorses Doctor Stepanek's suggestions "that at an early date there should be an international conference of engineers, rather than of politicians and statesmen, bound by tradition and self-seeking nationalism—a conference of constructively minded men who could take fresh views of the world's condition, deal scientifically with fundamental causes and suggest impartial, far-sighted plans for continuing progress."

Mr. Flinn advocated a joint convention of the great national engineering societies in Europe in the summer of 1923 to meet the engineers of all the countries of Europe for discussion of such of the world problems as may be the most vulnerable to engineering attack.

For an American University.

In appealing for the establishment of an American university in central Europe, Minister Stepanek said that it would constitute a center from which could be given out the best products of American culture, a source of correct information about America and American ideas. Through a world alliance of engineers, the minister thought, a constructive type of mind could be brought more effectively into the service of the nations.

Professor Adams predicted that artificial distinctions between nations would be removed by engineering science. Removal of the barrier of distance, he said, is bringing nations so close together, and making them so interdependent, that intelligent cooperation will make war impossible. Racial and national antagonism, Professor Adams asserted, will give way to the progress of engineering science.

HOOCH FREE IN KENTUCKY HILLS

Correspondents Find Quiet Sort of Men Make "Mountain Dew With Kick."

SUSPICIOUS OF STRANGERS

Continually on the Alert for Deputy Sheriffs, Revenue Agents and Prohibition Officers—Read World Magazines.

Catlettsburg, Ky.—Typical mountain moonshiners of Kentucky are not always of the gun-toting and trouble-making kind, it is proven to news correspondents by visits into the mountain region in this area of the state. The mountaineer type of moonshiner, however, is continually on the alert for deputy sheriffs, prohibition officers and revenue agents.

After a trip of thirty or forty miles into the mountains the correspondent was escorted to a moonshiner's log shack, made from the rough timber of the hillside and carefully arranged on a foundation of stone.

"Bill" greeted his visitors with a keen eye, a bit of suspicion, but with a friendly note in his shout of "welcome stranger." Proper inquiries whether any squirrels inhabited an adjacent mountain side, where a newly beaten path had been noticed, brought the answer that squirrels were scarce and none were found in the woods.

Mountain Dew Kicks.

When a friendly spirit developed some "mountain dew," or, in the language of the cities, "white mule," was produced from a small hand-made cupboard within the single room of the cabin, over which hung a religious picture and other articles of a religious nature. On the opposite side of the room over the bed of the mountaineer was a rifle of heavy caliber, an automatic pistol and a small-caliber revolver. The contrast was unique.

A small drink of the "mountain dew" almost brought slumberland a la Dempsey. Inquiries as to the age of the liquor brought the answer, "That's today's stuff."

Hospitality of typical southern quality will be found among the mountaineer residents if you are a "friend"; if an enemy—beware, or, as "Bill" explained it, "snakes in the mountain are killed." "Bill" makes his farm a payable proposition for his wife and children, who were attending church at the time of the correspondent's visit, by occasionally cutting some timber.

Reads Magazines of World.

His interest in world affairs is not limited and weekly trips to the nearest postoffice furnishes him with newspapers from the "outside." These are read by one member of the family, by lamp and candle light, to the others and often last throughout the week.

The moonshiner's home from the outside has an uninviting appearance, but once within the home, while some inconveniences are found, the impression of cleanliness is produced. The low ceiling forces a man of ordinary height to stoop. The board floor may creak, but it is solid and high and dry. In winter cold winds are shut out by the mud-plaster between the cracks of logs and by the board and paper lining of the inner walls. Heat is furnished by an oil burner and cooking is done on a coal range

Oxen teams haul coal to the home during the fall months. A yoke of oxen pulling a load of timber along the narrow mountain road explains the manner which enabled the mountaineer to obtain all the sizable logs used in constructing his home.

YOUNG JAPAN TAKES TO JAZZ

Less Modernized Nipponese, However, Frown on Western Dancing.

Tokyo, Japan.—The question whether western dances are immoral is the subject of a lively debate in the Japanese newspapers at present. In the last few years western dancing has grown popular among Japanese women, especially those who have lived abroad, although it is by no means general as yet. They dance very gracefully in their native costumes and heelless slippers, but the older and less modernized Japanese frown on the growing custom.

Saving a Bit of Time.

An American tourist in Yorkshire was very much interested in the "quaint" dialect of that section of England. He stopped to have a chat with an old Yorkshireman, who was busy cleaning some harness in the stable yard. Just then a butterfly settled on the stable door and the American exclaimed, "Pretty, ain't it? Now what do you call them here?" The old man made a deft shot at the butterfly with his cap. "You was a butterbug," he said stolidly, "but us chaps calls them flugs to save a bit of time."

Photograph Stars in Investigation of Light Rays.

Expeditions Will Go to Australia to Make Astronomical Observations When Sun Goes Into Total Eclipse.

Papeete, Tahiti.—Preliminary observations were made here in April and May by Dr. Robert Trumpler, assistant director of the Lick observatory on Mount Hamilton, California, in preparation for final astronomical observations in northern Australia to prove or disprove the part of Einstein's theory of relativity which has to do with the composition and characteristics of light.

Various astronomical expeditions will gather on the northern coast of Australia September 21 to take their observations when the sun goes into total eclipse that day. Doctor Trumpler's work here has been to photograph, on a large scale, the stars in that part of the heavens where the sun will be on September 21. On the day of the eclipse, when the sun is totally obscured and the stars are visible, similar photographs will be taken on the same scale.

Einstein's contention is that light is not, as scientists hitherto have held, the very rapid vibrations of the all-pervading ether, but is made up of electrons and therefore is a form of matter. If light is matter in any form, it will be subject to the law of gravitation, and it is to establish or disprove this point that the observations are being made here and in Australia.

If Einstein's theory of light is well founded, according to Doctor Trumpler, the rays of light from a star in that quarter of the heavens passing by so large a mass as the sun will be deflected by the force of the sun's gravitation and the star in question will appear on the photographic plate at a place slightly removed from its true position in a direction away from the sun's disk.

SEES FORGOTTEN TRIBE

American Bird Specialist Invades Jungles of Nicaragua.

Gets Large Collection of Rare Birds, Beasts, Fish and Reptiles—Penetrates to Villages of Sumo Indians.

Philadelphia.—Wharton Huber, assistant curator of the ornithology section of the Academy of Natural Sciences, returned recently to this city from hitherto little known regions of Nicaragua, where he assembled a large collection of birds, beasts, fish and reptiles, a number of which he believes have not yet been classified.

He also claims to have penetrated to the villages of Sumo Indians, who rarely had seen a white man. The scientist's specimens include 600 birds, 40 rare mammals and 2,000 fish, reptiles and insects, all or which will be placed on exhibition in the local institution.

"My research work was done about 180 miles inland from the Nicaraguan coast," said Mr. Huber. "We established our headquarters at a small mining camp, whence we made trips farther into the country. The average annual rainfall here is 147 inches. From the time I reached the interior until I left there never was a dry article of clothing on me. The country is infected with red bugs, smaller than fleas, which burrow under the skin and inflict serious wounds.

"I went up the Prinza Polka river for 180 miles in a pitpan, an open boat made of a hollowed-out mahogany log. Then in a smaller pitpan I ascended the Banbana river to Miminda. The district is hilly and covered with tropical forests so dense that it is impossible to enter them until a way is cut by Indians.

"The only inhabitants are a few scattered tribes of Indians apparently of Spanish and Miskito Indian descent. With a body of these Indians as guides, I penetrated to certain villages of the Sumo Indians.

"The Sumo men are very skillful hunters, but the tribe is rapidly becoming extinct. With all their ability in hunting and their courage of facing wild animals, they are excessively timid of strange human beings and will run away even from members of other Indian tribes. Miskito Indians sometimes walk into their villages and take anything they want without meeting resistance. The Sumos, numbering about 500 souls all told, have the slant, almond eyes of the Chinese, and their skin is about the same color as that of a Chinaman."

Mr. Huber had with him a number of dogs, two of which were killed by jaguars. The scientist believes that fully 40 per cent of the birds and animals he shot were lost, because neither dogs nor Indians could make their way into the jungles to the point where they fell. He used dynamite to secure his fish specimens.

Temporarily Out of Order

By RUBY DOUGLAS

(©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Grace O'Brien spent many hours of her day cooped up in the tiny outside box office of a movie theater. It was the only way she had of earning her living when she found herself a young widow after the war. She was accurate, systematic and quick, and it did not take her long to become expert in the art of selling tickets to the hurrying public.

Two elevators ran from the outside foyer of the theater where she sold tickets and two girls operated these lifts. They were relieved, as was Grace herself, by other girls who came on to do their turn at the work.

Sometimes, Gay, I wonder whether the monotonous ups and downs of my life here in this elevator are not more wearing to the nerves than the sedentary life you live cooped up in that box," remarked one of the elevator girls to Grace, when there was a lull in patronage for both of them.

"It's an even break," acquiesced Grace, "but I think we are lucky to have any jobs at all, and I'm thankful for mine."

"That's the reason we call you Gay." At that moment a man stepped up to the little window, put down a dollar bill and asked for a ticket. As he took the change he looked through the circular aperture at Grace O'Brien's face. Suddenly he reached his hand through.

"Grace—why Grace Lowe!" he exclaimed. "Is it you?"

Grace looked at him scrutinizingly. "Bob Morton!" she cried.

For a moment each held the hand of the other but did not speak. It was ten years since they had seen each other.

"Aren't you lost?" asked Grace, at a loss for words, while he held her eyes so compellingly.

"I'm just on here for a visit. And you?"

"Oh—it's a long story with me," admitted Grace.

And then, urged by the gathering string of expectant patrons of the moving picture house, the man disappeared.

"An old friend?" asked the elevator girl when there was a moment of rest again.

"He was more than that—in our school days," said Grace.

"Oh—" broached the girl meaningly.

"We were really-truly sweethearts in those days, and then I came East and then the war and George in his uniform and the call to the front and—well, I married George before he left. That's all. I have never heard of Bob from that day to this."

"But you will—if I know a chin when I see it," laughed the girl. "And I saw his."

It was the next day that Bob Morton was dragged as by a magnet to the moving picture theater again.

"Isn't there some time, some place, somehow that we could have a visit?" he asked, after talking to Grace for a few moments.

Grace was silent. She could not ask him to her tiny room. She would not ask him to the general parlor of the boarding house. She did not like to let him take her to some place of amusement.

"Why couldn't you just visit—here?" she said hesitatingly.

A group of persons sought tickets.

"It's a fine place to—to talk," Bob said, amusedly, as he took again the place before the glass window. "Now—isn't it?"

"It isn't exactly my idea of—of romance!" Grace laughed.

Bob stepped aside again. He was thinking. His time in New York was short.

"Gay says you are an old friend of hers," said a voice at his side.

Bob turned hastily and took off his hat. "Ah—yes—very old. From her home town, in fact. You—you call her Gay?"

"We call her that because she's such a brick in the face of all the trouble she's had—and it nicknames Grace very well."

Bob remembered that Grace was wearing black—all black—on both of the occasions when he had seen her. "She's—she's had trouble, then?"

"Oh—yes! Her husband was killed in the war."

Bob was silent for a few moments. "Oh—yes—so he was. I—perhaps I did see that in the local papers." He knew well that he had not. He knew that he had never connected Grace with any husband, dead or alive."

"I have been trying to get a few words with her, but she seems so busy," he admitted to the girl.

The elevator bell rang; the girl looked at her wrist watch. "She will be off duty in ten more minutes. Stick around."

Bob remained. The girl returned with a little placard which bore the lettering, "Temporarily Out of Order." She fastened it to the door of the elevator she was running.

"What's that for?" asked Bob, amused. There was still a crowd at the window, and Grace was busy selling tickets. The girl who was to relieve her had arrived.

"It means," said the elevator operator, "that you and Gay are going to have ten minutes of privacy that isn't a boarding place, and maybe you can fix up a date with her to take her out and tell her all about it again. No one will know the difference—but me—and I know it is hard to talk while a string of movie fans is waiting to buy tickets."

Bob laughed aloud. He looked at the sign on the lift door. Then Grace emerged from the little rear door of the ticket booth.

"I say, Gay," said her friend.

Grace looked from the girl to Bob and back again. "What's up?" she asked, feeling the nearness of something important.

"We—we have decided that though an elevator isn't a very sentimental place—it is very quiet when it bears this sign." She pointed to the card.

"Come in for just a moment, Gay," said Bob.

Grace blushed as she had not blushed for ten years.

"In you go," urged the girl. "And you, too," she said, pushing Bob gently on the back.

She closed the door of the attractive little elevator and left the two alone.

When they emerged Grace came up to her, her eyes bright with a renewed outlook on life. "Bob wants you and me to have dinner with him. We—we might have a lot to tell you."

"Well—my internal economy is not 'temporarily out of order,' so I'll go," said the girl, removing the sign from the door and turning the elevator over to the relief worker.

ANNUAL BLESSING OF WINE

Ceremony in French Village on St. Marcellin's Day—Aid of Saint Invoked During Drought.

A singular custom is that observed in Boulbon-en-Provence, a village in the department of the Bouches-du-Rhone, near the town of Aramon, France, so famous for its red wines.

Every year, on St. Marcellin's day, that is on the first of June, there is a procession of bottles. About 7 o'clock in the evening, while the bells are ringing at full pitch, the men—the men alone—assemble and in a procession march to a distant chapel, every one carrying a bottle of his best wine.

The cure blesses these bottles, after which the participants drink a gulp of this wine while the priest chants psalms.

At the end of the ceremony the cortege returns to the village, this time following the banner of St. Marcellin. And then every one goes home with the precious flask, which is only opened in case of fever, stomach trouble or other indispositions.

St. Marcellin, in Boulbon-en-Provence, is as favorable to water as he is to wine. In periods of drought his bust is carried across the vineyards, whereupon, the carriers sing, and immediately it rains.

Letters as Newspapers.

At one time there were no newspapers, and news had to be passed on entirely by word of mouth.

The first papers were in the form of letters, and the earliest of these was the "Acta Diurna" (Daily Happenings), published in Rome in 691 B. C.

The last news-letter was issued in America in 1704. This was the Boston News-Letter, several copies of which are to be found in the collection of the Boston Historical society.

The first newspaper printed from type was called the Gazette, and was published in Bavaria in 1457, while the first advertisement that appeared in print was the announcement of a reward for the recovery of two stolen horses, and was contained in the London Impartial Intelligencer in March, 1648.

PASSPORT VISES EXPENSIVE

Every Central European State Mulcts Passing American $10 at Frontier.

Belgrade, Jugo-Slavia. — Collecting $10 gold from American travelers every time a passport is vised continues to be one of the popular occupations of officials of the states of central Europe.

Any American who wishes to visit one of the countries must pass the frontiers of several of the others and at each frontier the charge is $10 a head and $10 every time he passes. One American business man within the past three months has paid $120.

"But don't blame us, blame your State department," said a representative of the Jugo-Slavia foreign office. "It is a matter of reciprocity with us; we charge the same fee as does the United States."

"KNOCKED OUT" THE PATIENT

Surgeons of Ancient Egypt Had Simple but Most Effective Way of Administering Anesthetic.

The use of anesthetics in surgical operations is not a modern invention. Surgeons of bygone days knew of anesthetics and used them thousands of years ago, according to an article in Hearst's International Magazine.

They trephined skulls, they amputated arms, legs and performed the Cesarian operation, and they did all these things with the help of anesthetics.

Those ancient masters of surgery were without the very valuable chloroform and ether of modern times. They most commonly used vegetable drugs, such as morphine and hasheesh, or alcohol. The leaves of plants containing cocaine were preferred by the ancient races of South America.

The surgeons of ancient Egypt, probably the most skilled of antiquity, had a method of their own at once more direct and spectacular. They hit the patient on the head with a club, and operated while he was "out" as a result of the blow.

Wooden blocks were fitted to the head to save injury to scalp and skin, and the mallet which hit the block was also made of wood.

The art of hitting just hard enough and at exactly the best point was a delicate one, and no doubt, the expert at this scientific black-jacking was as much respected in ancient Egypt as is the skilled anesthetist today in New York or Paris.

Grow Mushrooms in Old Quarries.

South of the city of Paris the country is honeycombed with abandoned quarries, some of which are of enormous extent, resembling the shafts of great mines, from 300 yards to half a mile in length, and lying from 30 to 50 feet beneath the surface of the ground. In these old quarries are grown nearly all the mushrooms consumed in the French capital. The mushrooms flourish in these caverns at all seasons and they have, in Paris, the reputation of being superior in flavor to those grown elsewhere. The worst enemy of the mushroom growers is a species of fly that swarms through the dark passages in such numbers as sometimes to extinguish the candles of the workmen. The larvae of this fly destroy the beds before the shoots have emerged from the ground.

Belief in Rain Cure.

That the rain which falls on Ascension day contains medicinal qualities is a superstition which still survives in certain districts of England. In such places the first duty of the housewife on the morning of Holy Thursday is to set out in the garden all the available shallow crocks and pans to catch such measure of the precious fluid as the heavens may afford. Often her toil is vain, but if rain does come the water collected is carefully bottled and put away for use in various ailments. "Holy Water," as it is called, is especially esteemed as a lotion for eye troubles.

A Caribbean Courtship

By BEVERLEY BELL

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

During the five days' sail from New York to Porto Rico the good ship Santurce had kept such an even keel that not one of the 200 passengers missed a meal in the dining saloon.

Marjorie Brainard had spent most of her time on deck with her aunt.

She was a good sailor; her aunt a poor one. Which is another way of saying that by the third day out Marjorie was wishing fervently for some roughish weather—the little rogue. The tall, dark, handsome young Spaniard who sat at the captain's table, and whose eyes were forever meeting hers, holding them for just a moment, with such a soulful look, had not yet been introduced to her. She felt sure he would be, if her aunt were to leave her alone on the deck for just one little half hour.

As the Santurce slowly steamed up the ten-mile harbor to San Juan, passengers all ready to disembark, baggage piled high on the main deck, the tall Spaniard passed Marjorie and her aunt, and he looked very intently at Marjorie. At the same time a touch of red came to his brown cheeks; his eyes shone with an indefinable longing.

She was fascinated. She could not seem to drop her own eyes.

The young man's companion was an American.

As they came to a stop a few feet from Marjorie, she heard the American say, "Alvarado, tonight we shall be eating some of your superb grapefruit and oranges. What a fine rest I am to have! What wonderful air! And that sunset across the Caribbean—I've never seen its equal."

"Yes," replied Alvarado, "we shall endeavor to give you a good time"—this in perfect English—"but you will have to excuse me tomorrow. I shall have to run into San Juan. There is a lady I must meet." And he turned deliberately and looked again at Marjorie.

Somehow she understood that she was the lady in question.

Her pretty blushes and confusion were heightened not a little by the further remark of the American, "Why, you sly dog! And all those four years at college we couldn't get you to look at a girl. So you have a fiancee here, eh?"

To which Alvarado replied simply, "No; this is an American lady whom I wanted to meet, and I shall arrange to do so tomorrow," and the tone indicated that he wished the subject dropped.

Next morning Vicente Alvarado presented himself, dressed in immaculate flannels, at the desk of the Condado hotel. He asked the clerk to send his card to Mrs. William Mortimer. On it was written the request that he might see her for a moment.

Marjorie's aunt was in gracious mood. She came down to the palm-decorated lobby with the messenger.

Alvarado advanced to meet her.

Very briefly, in the essence of true Spanish politeness, he stated that he sought an introduction to her niece. On shipboard there was no one to vouch for him. Here, in his own country, she could satisfy herself of his standing. Would she permit consult the American governor, the secretary of the house of delegates, the resident manager of the great winter resort hotel, if she wished.

Tomorrow, with her permission, he would call with his car for her niece and herself and drive them to his father's famous fruit farm across the bay at Miramar.

Marjorie's aunt was surprised, and rather pleased.

This was not quite an American proceeding, but then, she was in a Latin country.

Next day Alvarado drove them to the fruit farm. They were delighted. They brought back great native baskets of grapefruit, bananas and oranges.

As Marjorie and her aunt stepped from the car Alvarado asked Marjorie to swim in the ocean with him next day, inviting her aunt to accompany them to the beach.

Next morning at Marjorie's place at the breakfast table was a huge vase of jasmine, and there were roses for her aunt.

Promptly at 10 Alvarado presented himself.

Marjorie pleaded disinclination to swim that morning—would Senor Alvarado walk along the lovely beach and help her over the rocks and up to the abandoned fortress walls? And with a sly look at her aunt she said teasingly, "Auntie, dear, you can watch us all the day. It's only half a mile, and you can see clearly."

Slowly the two walked along the smooth white sand. Occasionally a wave would send its riplets almost to their feet, and Alvarado would hastily lead Marjorie away from it. Once he actually picked her up, his own feet being wet to the ankles.

Then they clambored over the lichen-covered rocks to the old fortress, and standing on the bed of a dismantled gun platform, waved handkerchiefs to Mrs. Mortimer.

When they sat down it seemed as though they were not on land, but on a steamer far at sea, with waves breaking about the prow.

Vicente Alvarado had never until the past few days imagined he could love any woman but his mother. At that moment he was consumed with the desire to declare his love for the rarely beautiful girl at his side, to whom he had been so tantalisingly near for five days on the steamer, yet without being able to speak to her.

The Latin blood of the boy was leaping to his brain with the suggestion, "Speak to her."

The four years of study and athletics in an American college were holding him back. His face showed plainly the signs of the battle raging in his heart.

"Why—why, you're unhappy about something, aren't you, Senor Alvarado, aren't you, really?" said Marjorie, noticing how quiet he was and glancing at his troubled face, even handsomer than usual in his distress.

He started, "On the contrary, my dear lady, I am happy, very happy—to be with you, alone; just in the privilege of knowing you; being able to speak to you. I wanted so much to talk to you on the steamer. We could not seem to be introduced. You talked with no one. The captain declined to make the introduction. I was desperate." And he went on and on as if to make up lost time.

At last he stopped. There seemed little else to voice except the one great sentiment that Marjorie could not help seeing was overpowering him.

"I too, wished that I might speak to you," she said simply.

"I am so happy," he returned, and then in a flash he took her soft white hand in his strong bronzed one, and looking with all the intensity of a long line of Castilian Spanish Alvarados he said: "Miss Brainard—Marjorie—must I go and bring your aunt, or take you to her, or may I say it here to you, while we are alone—just we two; speak, dear one, speak to me; you know what I would say?"

Marjorie had not removed her hand from his. It trembled. Perhaps her fingers tightened just a little.

"What do you wish to tell me?" she said slyly laughing up into his eyes, for in their emotion they had risen and were standing on the edge of a great rock projecting over the waves of the blue Caribbean.

"That I love you; love you; love you, dearest girl!"

Then he caught himself with a mighty effort, and in a moment continued, "but I love you as a Spanish gentleman loves; honorably and with all regard for everything that is due you and to the rights, for instance, of your aunt who has trusted us to come up here alone. Let us return to her and I will continue in her presence."

No one in the whole island of Porto Rico could possibly have had a greater surprise that day than fell to the lot of Vicente Alvarado when Marjory said: "There is no need for that, Senor Alvarado. When we returned to the hotel yesterday I told my aunt that if you ever said you loved me I should tell you that I, too, loved you, and she replied, 'I wouldn't blame you, dear, I could love him myself.' You see auntie ran away from boarding school and married her tutor. They came here eighteen years ago on their honeymoon. He died three years after. This is her first visit since.

"When she saw you on the boat she said, 'There is a true Spanish gentleman.' When I said I would like to meet you, she said, 'No, wait; we shall see what we shall see.' And now I understand."

Cossack Noted for Love of Freedom.

The Cossack Krug was a sort of super-parliament composed of about 50 members from each of the three great Cossack parliaments, the Don, the Terek and the Kuban. The Cossacks have always enjoyed great liberties, even under the most autocratic of czars; and, as a matter of fact, they always will be free, simply because they will not live under any condition other than freedom. Every man jack of them has it ingrained that he was born free and that he will die rather than give up an iota of the freedom that is his birthright.

Cossacks are by birth and by profession warriors, and this Krug was a collection of as fine a lot of clean-limbed, stern-jawed fighting men as could be assembled anywhere.

Goat Locked Eight Days in Car Without Water

Poplar Bluff, Mo.—And now comes the "harmless" billy goat displaying some of his unique qualifications.

When a carload of lime was loaded at Cape Girardeau, Mr. Goat, unnoticed, made his way into the car and was locked therein. Eight days after, when the seals of the car were broken at the destination, Doniphan, Mo., and when the door was opened, out jumped Mr. Goat, spry, but apparently thirsty.

He was quickly treated to a drink of "Mountain Dew," which bubbles from a spring near Doniphan, and was happy. He seemed none the worse for his "Volstead feat."

Kansas City, Mo.—A white squirrel is a rarity. Last week, in Shannon county, a man saw a white squirrel go into his hole in a big oak tree. The next day he took some incredulous neighbors, determined to capture the little animal. It was necessary to chop down four trees before this was accomplished. And, sure enough, the squirrel was all white with pink eyes. It now lives in a cage in Birch Tree.

NOT SO MANY DEAF AND DUMB

United States Census Count Shows That the Rate per 1,000,000 Population Has Decreased.

Washington.—Although the 44,885 deaf and dumb persons enumerated in the 1920 census was a slight increase above the 1910 figure, the rate per million of population decreased from 486 to 425, the census bureau announced. This decline, which also is reported in European countries, was attributed to advanced treatment for certain children's diseases which frequently cause deafness.

Rat Attacks Sleeping Baby.

Kansas City, Mo.—The screams of her six-months-old daughter, Alice, aroused Mrs. William T. Elledge shortly after one o'clock in the morning. Rushing to the child's bed, she found a large gray rat clinging to the baby's right foot. Mrs. Elledge shook the rat loose. With the child in their arms, Mr. and Mrs. Elledge ran to a hospital. Emergency treatment was administered.

Glenwood Tourists Camp

With this issue we begin publishing, which we think will be read with interest, reports of interviews with tourists who are stopping at Glenwood camp ground, on their way east or west. Almost without exception all campers there are abundantly sociable and free to tell of their experiences. And all express themselves as being highly pleased with Glenwood camp grounds, and tell us that with the proposed modern improvements this will be one of the best camps on the road.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Oxman, started from Los Angeles, Cal., in a Paige machine. They were three days on the great desert, which they say has stations for gas, oil and water about every 30 miles. Were two days in the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, three in St. Louis and two in Meade, Kansas, where they report one of the finest camps for tourists, which had a swimming pool, modern bath houses, two artesian wells of fine water, a Dutch oven, stoves and laundry. They passed through the petrified forest of Arizona, between Holdbrook and Springville, a section about four miles square with no living thing but some grass. Have gone 2800 miles, used 125 gallons of gas phone and had but five punctures. Worst roads in Missouri.

One tourist from Kansas City said he liked Columbus better than any place he had visited on his way east, and thinks that when he returns he will winter here.

Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Konola stopped here on their way home in Salt Lake City, Utah. Have been to Baltimore, Md. Started from Utah June 13th in a Ford, had one old Firestone fabric tire on the machine when starting and it is still in fair condition while three others have been discarded. Wore out two sets of break bands going from Wheeling to Baltimore and back. Best camp east of Ohio found at Frostberg, Mr., is 10 acres large, electric lights, small fee for gas plates o rwashboard, good benches, charge 25c a night. Omaha, Neb., has wash houses, gas stoves (drop a nickle in slot affair) electric lights, etc. Says Glenwood camp a wonderful place for tourists. Suggests good supply of tables.

F. V. Lindsay and family (seven in all) left Los Angeles June 10th in two Hudsons for Pittsburg, Philadelphia "and everywhere else," by way of Santa Fe Trail. Only th.se punctures from California to Pittsburgh. Report best camps west at: Hutchison, Kan., shower baths, phonograph, piano, reading room and amusement park. La Junta, Colo., fine. Best roads east of St. Louis. Missouri roads "bum"—in fact only decent thing in that state is 16 miles of good road and have to pay 50 cents to cross a toll bridge leading to that road. Traveled 4000 miles.

"Montana Pete," who has been chasing all over the east for the past two years doing Wild West stuff with poor success is headed back home to Pascan, Montana, before he goes broke.

S. Cruden and wife, Toledo, stopped over with their "Baby Lincoln" or "Suits Us" on their way to Oklahoma. Say if you want to cure all your ills get out of doors.

Joseph E. Rooham and wife, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., are on their way to Oregon and California in a Ford. Report best camp in east at Washington, D. C.

Frank Fenton and wife who have been from Kansas City, Mo., to New York and east, report having seen no better camp east of here than Glenwood. Think this a fine site, with a few modern improvements.

R. A. Howard and wife are returning to their home in Pennsylvania from Albuquerque, N. M., and other western points. Drove an Essex machine, in all about 8,000 miles. Came over the Yuma Desert. Say Glenwood has one of the best places in the world for a fine camp. Best camps in West, Muskogee, Okla., which has large kitchen screened in, 12 gas stoves, 4 large tables and good supply of benches. Charge 25 cents a day for kitchen service. Also has sanitary toilets.

C. C. Tweedy and family, just came from California and Washington State, on their way home near Steubenville, Ohio. Left their Ohio home on May 30th, 1921, in a Dodge machine. Have visited Yellowstone Park, Mt. Rainer, Washington and Yosemite Valley and other noted western points, traveling in all since starting about 23,000 miles. Denver, Colo., has shower baths, laundry, commissary, barber shop, etc. Some camps along the way have electric stoves.

Stewart Wagoner and wife, back from Niagara Falls to their home in Aurora, Ill., say that Glenwood camp is as nicely situated as any they have seen. Suggest a driveway at west end of the camp, also needs tables and seats. Suggest that city put in commissary department, receipts of which would help keep up camp expenses.

Councilman Westlake succeeded in getting appropriations through council for future improvements and we are hoping that when the 1923 season opens up we can see a camp we'll all be proud of.

We will give more next week.

Mr. and Mrs. Glenn L. Wigton and daughter Betty Jean, of Ponca City, Okla., Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Wigton of Detroit, Mich., and Rev. and Mrs. I. L. Wilkins and family of Paulding, Ohio, returned to their homes last week, after spending two weeks with their relatives, Mrs. Lyman W. Hoffman of S. Ogden Ave., Mrs. Fred C. Pixley of Kimball Place and Mr. Homer W. Carter of the McCoy Road. Several social affairs were given in their honor while here. Rev. Wilkins occupied the pulpit at the first Presbyterian Church, during the absence of the pastor, Dr. Brundage. Mr. Homer W. Carter and family leave next week for Ponca City, Okla., where they will make their future home. Mr. Carter will be employed as office manager for his cousin, Mr. Glen Wigton, who is president of the Glen L. Wigton Motor Car Co., of that city.

Wildman Flavors, Sayman Soap. Call Mrs. C. O. Miller, Hilltop 268.

Mrs. Julia Taylor, 63, colored, widow, died from complications Monday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Laura Coleman, 338 S. Wheatland Ave. She leaves her daughter. The body will be sent to Covington, Ky., for funeral and burial by Mrs. D. A. Whittaker.

Charles E. Edmonds, 54, member of the city fire department, died from complications Friday at his home, 215 S. Ogden Ave. He Leaves a widow, Mrs. Sadie Edmonds, one daughter, two brothers, and one sister. Funeral was Monday at the residence. Burial in Green Lawn. About 75 members of the fire department attending.

New Serum for Cancer.

Berlin.—Announcement of a new serum for the treatment of cancer has been made in Karlsruhe by Doctor Muhlebein. The physician declared that he has treated a large number of people with complete success. He claims, also, to have perfected another serum which will restore failing sight almost instantly.

Find $5,000 in Stolen Silks.

Hammond, Ind.—Five thousand dollars' worth of silks consigned to a Chicago department store was found strewn along the Pennsylvania railroad near the county line where thieves had stolen them from a train. The thieves had evidently been frightened away.

Jury Deliberates Fifteen Days.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—James J. Flannery, wealthy clubman, charged with the murder of his young wife in February was acquitted after the jury had deliberated fifteen nights and fourteen days. It was the longest deliberation of a jury in the history of Allegheny county.

Bullets Glance From Head of Man.

Billings, Mont.—Two bullets which struck his forehead but glanced away without serious injury prevented Fred D. Mill from shooting himself after he shot his sister-in-law, Mrs. Henry Stroh, in the leg. The woman's wound is not serious. Mill was intoxicated at the time, police say.

Girl Is Underwater Soprano.

Washington.—Bernice Hackney is an underwater soprano. She entertains her friends by singing while under water. She doesn't know how she does it. She says she simply opens her mouth and sings, while her friends hold their ears to the surface of the water and listen.

Are Extinct Bugs.

Livingston, Mont.—Insects, buried for thousands of years in a glacier in Yellowstone park, known as Grasshopper glacier, are not grasshoppers at all but an unclassified insect now extinct, according to William C. Alden, expert in glacial geology for the United States government.

Police Sergeant Saved Own Son From Drowning

Police Sergt. Charles Tuley of Vancouver, B. C., was strolling along English bay when he heard the cry of "boy drowning." Fully dressed, he jumped into the water and seized the lad, who was about to sink for the third time. Taking the body ashore, he discovered he had rescued his own son.

ASK PEDESTRIANS TO KEEP TO LEFT

Strollers on Country Roads Urged to Face Oncoming Traffic in Rambles.

PERILS OF NIGHT ARE BARED

Dark Clothing Often Shuts Man on Street From Gaze of Driver in Automobile—International Road Congress to Meet.

New York.—Pedestrians along country roads and those who walk in the streets at night in preference to using the sidewalks can contribute materially toward the reduction of automobile accidents by walking on the left side of the road, facing oncoming traffic, according to D. H. Lewis, acting executive chairman of the American Automobile association.

"Courtesy on the part of the automobile driver demands the use of dimmed lights at night," said Mr. Lewis, "and this factor, while it contributes to the safety of passing motorists, makes it exceedingly difficult for the automobile driver to see a pedestrian walking along the edge of the road in the same direction the car is traveling. This difficulty is increased if the pedestrian happens to be wearing dark clothing. The result is that the driver is practically on top of the pedestrian before the latter becomes visible.

Warning to Pedestrians.

"Walking on the left hand side of the road is just as good for the pedestrian and enables him to see the approaching automobile in time to step aside if the motorist does not see him in time to swerve.

"The pedestrian should remember that the rules of the road require the autoist to keep to the right and should contribute to the factor of safety by keeping to that side of the road which best enables him to escape the oncoming car and especially the occasional speed fiend or 'flivverboob,' who cares nothing for consequences and speeds regardless of the rights of others, for it has been truly said that whether you were in the right or not does not matter after you are in the hands of the undertaker."

Roads Congress to Meet.

A certain indication that after eight years of war and upheaval the world is beginning to return to a normal state is contained in the announcement that the International Road congress, which ceased operations in 1914 because of the European conflict, is to resume its deliberations early next May at Seville, Spain. The program for what promises to be the greatest and most important conference on highway improvement ever held has just been received from the office of the general secretary in Paris.

Thousands of delegates, representing national and state governments and good roads associations in the United States, Belgium, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, China, Japan, France, Great Britain, Italy, Holland, Sweden, Denmark, Switzerland, Argentina, Czechoslovakia, Spain, Portugal, Norway, Germany, Jugo-Slavia, Poland, Austria, Cuba, Chile, Brazil and many other countries, will participate in the congress and exchange views and experiences for mutual benefit. English, French and Spanish have been adopted as the official languages.

UNEARTH COIN OF YEAR 1724

Workmen Excavating Old Headquarters of General Washington Make Interesting Find.

New York.—Workmen engaged in excavating on the site of the mansion in Montclair, N. J., that was used by General Washington as his headquarters in the revolution found several old copper coins, one bearing the inscription, "British North America, 1724." Dr. Maurice Cohen, who now owns the property, obtained some of the coins.

The workmen were moving a ten-ton boulder from one corner of the property to the site of the Washington headquarters. The boulder will bear a bronze tablet bearing a picture of the old mansion and a suitable inscription placed there by the Sons and Daughters of the American Revolution. The old mansion was razed 15 years ago.

Indian Relics Found.

Salina, Kan.—Relics of the days when the Indians roamed the central Kansas prairies are being taken out of the sand pits east of Salina. Bones of large and unnamed animals have heretofore been found in this neighborhood, but these bones that are now being found in the sand pits are unlike anything ever seen here. The most of the specimens have large teeth, well preserved, while others are badly decayed. In addition to the bones many large bullets of lead, flattened by having come in contact with some object, are found.

Can't Take Pets to Yosemite.

Yosemite National Park.—Visitors to Yosemite hereafter must leave Fido and Tabby at home, for no longer will the rangers at the gates be permitted to care for the pets, according to a recent announcement. In years past dogs have been "checked" at the entrances, but this practice became so general that the energies of the rangers were devoted almost exclusively to the pups and kitties.

TO PROTECT TOURISTS

Minnesota Citizens War on Overzealous Officers.

Organize to Save Motorists From Unjust Fines by Small Town Authorities Who Prey on Highway Tourists.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Tourists, especially those from other states than Minnesota, will not be the prey of overzealous authorities in the small towns of Minnesota, who are rigidly enforcing local traffic codes with a zest, bent upon enhancing their own salaries or enriching the coffers of the village, if a movement started among several towns continues to spread.

Vigilance committees, composed of residents of the communities, have been formed, which the tourist who has been haled into court may depend on for fair, reasonable treatment. These committees will see that too rapid justice will not engulf the innocent, especially when the motorist happens to be a tourist from outside the state, and therefore expectedly ignorant of the traffic laws in that locality.

With the tourist industry developing by rapid strides in Minnesota, the action of the small town officers in strictly enforcing petty infractions was seen as a possible deterrent and menacing factor to its progress, according to Perry S. Williams, manager of the Minneapolis Journal travel and resort bureau, who was instrumental in organizing the first vigilance committee.

"The trouble apparently threatened as a result of the fact that at many points both the constables and deputies making the arrests and the court officer before whom the alleged offenders must appear profited with the assessment of the fine," Mr. Williams said. "Part of the work of the vigilance groups will be to correct this arrangement where it exists. Efforts will be made to place such officers on a definite and increased salary basis. Also it is planned to have moneys procured from fines placed in road funds to help along the general work of bettering the state highway conditions."

Communities lying along the state highway leading to and around Mille Lacs lake, on trunk highway No. 18, were first to organize the "vigilantes." Princeton led the way with the organization of a highway vigilance committee and similar groups are being formed at Onamia, Milaca and Isle.

BABY WONDER WHISTLER

Virginia Bedard of Portland, Ore., is only three years old, but you should hear her whistle. She made quite a hit when in San Francisco with her mother, Mrs. Grace Bedard. Scientists cannot figure how the youngster became such a great whistler. She carries any tune and, as for sounding the call of the birds—well, the birds themselves are fooled.

Japanese Cut Exports of Silk.

Tokyo.—In order to prevent a slump in the market, manufacturers and exporters of raw silk have decided to hold 30 per cent of their output at Yokohama. The silk has been accumulating at Yokohama owing to stagnation of export trade and decline in domestic demand.

UNIVERSITY OF FLYING

Advanced School Soon to Be Established in Texas.

Newest Form of Training in Air Service to Be Provided by United States Army—Ninety Listed in Initial Class.

San Antonio, Tex.—Development of one of the largest flying bases of the government air service at San Antonio is expected by air service officials with the transfer of the primary and observation schools to this point recently. The latest development of the flying base here is the establishment of an advanced flying school.

The opening of the advanced school, designated by air service officers as a "flying university," is the newest form of training in the air service, according to Maj. John N. Reynolds, officer in charge of the new courses. The school is located at Kelly field. Thirty cadets and 60 officers have entered the initial classes, and it is expected this number will be increased greatly with the opening of the fall term in September.

The advanced instruction offered in the "flying university" is divided into four branches—bombardment, pursuit, observation and attack, the primary groups of the air service. Embryo flyers will be graduated from the primary school, just removed from Carlstrom field, Florida, to Brooks field here, and then advanced to the higher training. The two schools will bear the same relation as high school and university, air officials state.

The present strength of Kelly field is 1,165 men and 108 officers, according to air service officials, while that of Brooks field is 350 men and 45 officers. This number will be greatly increased with the opening of the fall course, when 180 planes will be put in operation, at Brooks field, it is said. Approximately 100 planes are now in operation at Kelly field.

POLAND'S CATTLE INCREASE

Census Shows Horses Are Also Nearing Number of Pre-War Time.

Warsaw.—A census of Poland's horses and cattle shows that, in the territory of new Poland, the totals radually are approaching those of the pre-war period.

The county now has 3,200,000 orses, as compared to 3,500,000 in 913; 7,900,000 head of cattle, as compared to 8,100,000; 2,200,000 sheep, as ompared to 3,600,000, and 5,200,000 ogs, as compared to 5,600,000 in the last year before the war.

The Girl Back Home

By JESSIE DOUGLAS

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Miss Waring?"

Alice Waring laid down her pencil, turned her smooth brown head toward her employer and said in her clear vibrant voice. "Yes, Mr. Merrill."

"It's not about business, Miss Waring."

If the pulse in Alice Waring's throat beat faster, if the color for a moment touched her clear white skin, John Merrill did not see it. He was looking past her out of the office windows across the angles of roofs into the street below where people like ants were crowding out of the doors. It was five o'clock.

"I'm going home."

John Merrill's black brows were bent, he was looking dreamily past the buildings, past the swarm of insects in the street below into his own thoughts. Alice Waring had never seen quite that expression on his face, but she had imagined it. She could have closed her eyes and seen the mouth that shut so firmly, the square chin, the pleasant red-brown skin, the keen hazel eyes just as well as she did with him here before her.

She waited for him to go on. Alice Waring was the well-trained secretary. She knew when to speak; she knew, too, when silence was better.

"You knew I lived in the middle west?"

She nodded. For some reason her breath was coming faster; she could not have spoken if she had tried.

"You've been my secretary for four years, haven't you? And it's taken me that long to get on my feet. A girl back home has been waiting for me. I'm going home to marry her."

"You Don't Know Me!"

He picked up the paper knife and began drumming with it on his desk. Alice felt her own heartbeats keep time to it. He went on almost as though he were talking to himself.

"I'll be glad to get out of New York and into that quiet little town. They don't do things there as they do here. The girls don't smoke and wear skirts up to their knees and make clowns of their faces, thank God!" He pushed back his chair abruptly and stood up. "I'll leave everything in your hands, Miss Waring. I want to tell you how much I depend on you and trust you."

He gave her hand a firm hard pressure and then the office door closed after him. Alice neither cried nor pressed her hand against her heart nor leaned over to kiss the place where his hand had lain. She just sat there. Sat there very still, with her head drooping a little, looking out past the roofs to the sky that was sapphire blue, studded with nails of silver light. She sat there while all her dreams died and her youth seemed to slip away and her heart felt like a piece of lead that had dropped into her bosom by mistake.

When at last she put on her hat and adjusted her veil her hands were steady, but she had made a momentous decision. She would keep her position and run things until Mr. Merrill was almost back; the day before he arrived she would leave. The sight of him afterward would be a daily torture to her, the sound of his voice would crucify her; she was going to do the only thing she could—try to forget him in other work.

But John Merrill as he stepped off the train to the wooden platform of Evanston was another man. He felt younger. He drew in a deep breath of air and strode delightedly down the platform wondering why Arline hadn't come to meet him. He longed for the first sight of her pretty face with the smooth light hair, the pale skin, the delicate innocence of her mouth.

"John Merrill, you don't know me!"

John Merrill didn't. He had never seen this girl before. But he had seen many of this type; he had just left them all behind him, so he thought, in New York. She had a rakish hat on the top of a bobbed, light fuss of hair; she had coral earrings, a little too much lipstick and bare knees. He saw all that in his first glance.

"Of course, you don't have to kiss me," she taunted.

John Merrill gasped when he heard the voice; that was the only thing he did remember now. This was Arline! This flippant bit of girlhood, with her powdered cheeks and her nonchalant, bored manner.

"There's Ed; he'll run us some in his Stutz!"

Ed, in his long red roadster, removed a cigarette, but not his hat, as the other two stepped in beside him. John Merrill tried to catch up to their rapid-fire conversation. By the time he reached Arline's home he was not only a little tired, but very determined.

When, two weeks later, John Merrill returned to New York, he went first to his office. Miss Waring had left the day before, he was told. Everything was in order. The clerks looked at him slyly, at this man with keen brown eyes who was somehow rejuvenated from his visit "home." They all knew he had gone to get married.

"Miss Waring gone!" John Merrill stormed.

He was not used to being thwarted. He knew the office wouldn't run without her. What tommy-rot was this, leaving when he was away! He'd raise her salary, if that was what she wanted. He'd see to it himself. At five o'clock he stopped before the apartment in which Miss Waring lived.

He was shown into a very new marble hall with imitation palms and carried five flights in a gasping, gliding lift. He hated all this sham New York life.

Then he touched her bell and stepped into the hall. Alice Waring and her aunt were having supper. Alice sprang up from the table; Aunt Mame pressed him into a chair. John Merrill, who had not yet dined, found himself eating beaten biscuit and fried chicken and drinking a great cup of golden, savorous coffee. There were daffodils centering the table, the linen square was glossy and across the candles in their silver sconces he could look at Alice in a pale green frock from which her shoulders lifted as though from sepals of a lily.

How soft her voice was, and how gentle her manner! The rich, smoothness of her hair seemed to frame her face in mahogany. It was Aunt Mame who talked, to whom they both listened, but it was to Alice's serene face he looked back again and again.

Was this New York? These chairs with their rush seats, that sideboard with its polished fruit bowl, the quiet gray walls? This was not the New York of the jazz and the noise and the women who watched him from painted eyes. It was some quieter spot to which he had been carried on a magic carpet.

"I'm afraid," Alice said, lifting her chin when he broached the raise in her salary, "that I won't be able to come back."

"But I don't see how the office will be able to get along without you."

She only smiled.

"You're not going to be married?" he asked in sudden fear.

"No, we're not all like you, Mr. Merrill," Alice said lightly.

"I? I'm not married. Changed my mind. Sometimes the home town changes even more than you do." He rose awkwardly; he wanted to be asked to stay. "The office may be able to get along without you, but I won't," he said.

The look he shot her from hazel eyes filled her heart with wild joy.

"If you won't come to work for me, may I come to see you?"

She smiled and nodded, while Aunt Mame spoke the word of hospitality; but when the door had closed on his broad shoulders Alice did not cry nor press her hand against her heart, nor even lean over to kiss the place where his hand had lain. She just stood there. But her world was flooded with a sudden glory.

HIDE MONEY IN ODD PLACES

Oldtime Gypsies Have Little Use for Savings Banks, Preferring to Save Their Hoards.

Among their other queer ways, many gypsies have a magpie fashion of hiding money. Some of the younger men and women use savings banks, but the older members of the tribe still prefer to keep their wealth in quaint hiding places. A short time ago it came out in an English police court that a gypsy had lost $5,000 from his basket in which his wares were carried. The money, largely in gold, had been kept tucked away under the small articles that its owner offered for sale. Doubtless he thought that no one would dream of looking for it in such a place. On the death of Mary Anne Doe, the gypsy queen, her relations prepared to burn her cart, according to the usual custom. It had been broken up, and was just about to be fired, when sharp eyes detected the gleam of gold between two lengths of board that were nailed together. No fewer than 400 sovereigns were found concealed in this strange hiding hole. Other queer "banks" are the linings of hats and coats, and hollow heels of boots, which are used for hoarding notes. Even the stuffing of the horses' harness has sometimes been used as a hiding place for gold and paper money.

Exercises.

"You know how hard it is for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven," said the severe moralist.

"Enter the kingdom of heaven!" exclaimed Senator Sorghum. "Why, it has gotten so a rich man can't even subscribe to a campaign fund."

WHEN SOMEONE CARES

When you meet some disappointment, an' yer feelin' kind o' blue;
When yer plans have all got side-tracked, or some friend has proven untrue,
When yer toiling, praying, struggling at the bottom of the stairs—
It's like a panacea just to know that someone cares.

Someone who can appreciate one's efforts when he tries;
Someone who can understand—an' so can sympathize;
Someone who, when he's far away, still wonders how he fares—
Someone who never can forget—someone who really cares.

It will send a thrill of rapture through the framework of the heart;
It will stir the inner being 'till the tear drops want to start;
For this life is worth the living, when someone yer sorrow shares—
Life is truly worth the living when you know that someone really cares.

Oh, this world is not all sunshine—some days dark clouds disclose;
There's a cross for every joy-bell, an' a thorn for every rose;
But the cross is not so grevious, near the thorn the rose bud wares—
An' the clouds have silver linin's—when someone really cares.

A Question of Furniture

By H. IRVING KING

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Charles and Marian had been getting along beautifully. Furniture was the rock on which they split. Or rather—to improve the metaphor—furniture was the rock which divided the stream of their tranquil love and split it into two angry torrents. It is always sad when love's young dream gets sundered in this way. They were humble people, Charles Corbin and Marian Clay. He was a bookkeeper working in the city ten miles away, and she "assisted" at the soda water fountain at the village pharmacy.

It was over the great marble counter in front of the fizzing fountain that Charles fell in love with her. To see Marian draw a "raspberry plain" or concoct a chocolate sundae was to see Hebe herself dispensing the nectar of the gods. At least that was the way it seemed to Charles. Their courtship had been a long one, for they had both been saving up to start housekeeping. And now Charles' father had given him a pretty cottage. Both Charles and Marian had each a nice little nest-egg laid aside, so they fixed the day and began to buy furniture for their nest with their nesteggs. Marian's parents approved and so did the parents of Charles. Charles received a raise of salary and Marian gave up her place at the soda water fountain.

The buying of the furniture for the new home was a perfect plenishing orgy with the lovers. They spent carfare recklessly and wandered from one city furniture shop to another until they had examined and discussed enough sofas, chairs, tables, etc., etc., to have furnished the city hall. They agreed wonderfully well upon their selections, and when there happened to be a little difference of opinion upon the advisability of buying any certain piece they had a charming way of giving in to each other. Until it came to a question of one corner of the living room, then there came a jangling chord in the harmony; the music of their lives was jazzed. Marian wanted to buy for that fatal corner a little three-cornered table they had seen in one of the city shops, while Charles decidedly fancied for the position one of those atrocious imitation mahogany pedestals with gilt trimmings. In a vision he saw himself able at some future time to place a marble bust upon it—possibly one that resembled Marian.

"But that's such a cheap-looking thing," said Marian, referring to the pedestal.

"But it isn't cheap, my dear," replied Charles; "it is marked——"

"I don't care what it costs," retorted Marian, "it looks cheap, and besides, it is in wretched taste."

And that was the beginning of it. Each thought the other was unreasonable—and both were. "I have given in to you in every other thing, Charles," said Marian when the discussion had lasted over several days and showed no signs of coming nearer to a conclusion. "I have given way to you in everything before, but this time I must insist that you pay some regard to my wishes."

"Given way to me?" exclaimed he. "Why, I have let you choose whatever you liked—always. Am I to have nothing to say?"

And so it went until Marian wrote Charles a letter saying that "all was over between them." She was of the opinion that they could never be happy together after marriage if before marriage "such a vital difference of taste and character" was apparent between them. She returned his engagement ring and "hoped he would be happy with some one more suited to him than herself." She would keep her key—(they were both provided with keys to the cottage and had been accustomed to visit it separately or together whenever the fancy seized them to gloat over their future paradise and revel in little touches of rearrangement)—she would keep her key until they could arrange some division of the furniture; "upon that matter she would take proper advice."

Charles wrote back stiffly begging that she would consider the furniture as hers entirely. It might come in handy when she was married to some one more worthy of her than himself. To this she replied that after that she would have nothing whatever to do with the "old furniture." But somehow she forgot to send him her key for the cottage.

Charles' father said: "Well, well, marry the girl or not, just as you please—but it's always best to let the woman run the house. They will do it anyway." Marian's mother said: "My dear, it's always best to humor men in little things—it makes them much easier to manage."

The cottage was all ready for occupancy—all ready except that fatal corner which, bare and blank, seemed to be casting a blight over the uninhabited house. One evening, Marian stole to the cottage, let herself in with her key and turned on the electric light in the living room—for they had even had the electric meter installed—and sat down in an armchair to gaze at the vacant corner. How well she remembered the day she and Charles had bought that armchair, and how happy they had been in the selecting of it. She sighed, fixed her eyes upon the corner and pictured to herself how hideous that gilt mahogany pedestal would look there and how sweet that triangular table.

It was about a week after this and a dark stormy night, when a military figure might have been seen stealing through the obscurity toward the unoccupied cottage. It was Charles Corbin, and he bore in his arms an awkward burden wrapped in burlap. He let himself into the front hall and opened the living room door. The room was a blaze of light which the closed blinds and drawn curtains had prevented him from noticing from the outside. There was a little scream of surprise and alarm and there stood Marian Clay with one hand on a gilt mahogany pedestal which she had just placed in the heretofore vacant corner.

"Marian," cried Charles, and dropped his burden so suddenly that part of the wrappings came off, revealing a little three-cornered table—the very one Marian had longed for. Whether the pedestal or the table ultimately stood in the corner is a question we leave in the same condition as Stockton left his celebrated question of "The Lady of the Tiger." One of them did, that is sure, for Marian and Charles were married within the week.

RELICS FROM EGYPT

Interesting New Discoveries on View in London.

Graves of Courtiers and Royal Servants at Abydos Belong to Date as Unbelievably Remote as 5,000 Years B. C.

London.—Most intensely interesting are the relics brought back by Prof. Flinders Petrie, the great Egyptologist, and his colleagues from the tombs near Abydos. The precious fruits of last winter's search are on view at University college.

The graves at Abydos were those of courtiers and royal servants of the first dynasty kings, and the treasures that were buried with them belong to a date almost unbelievably remote—about 5,000 years B. C. These tombs were not known 20 years ago when Professor Petrie explored the famous tombs of the first dynasty kings. There are hundreds of them, and it is thought, from the evidence of many burials at one time, that in those times the servants of a king were sacrificed wholesale on his death.

The bodies were not mummified but lying on their sides with their belongings round them—finely-made flint knives, copper tools, and, of special interest, pieces used in games. There are some exquisitely carved figures of lions in ivory, probably part of a game in which these little figures were pushed along a board in pursuit of a hare. There are delicate copper needles, perhaps from the stock-in-trade of the court dressmaker, and a great deal of pottery and vessels in alubaster, all nearly perfect after 7,000 years.

One is struck once more by the evidence of a very finished civilization in the delicacy and refinement of these implements and decorations brought from "the dark backward and abysm of time."

The exhibition is rich in tablets of later dynasties from the same site. One of the eighteenth dynasty is memorable because the dead man does not pray for funeral offerings in the common form, but only that the gods may grant him "a heart that is sweet every day."

A great deal of important work was done also at Oxyrhynkhos, notably in exploration of the great Roman theater which held 10,000 people—one of the noblest theaters of antiquity.

GIRL, MA AND GRANDMA WED

Romance Revealed When Muriel Conkling of New York Marries Baron Van Reigersberg.

New York.—With the marriage of Muriel Lorillard Ronalds Conkling to Baron Louis Van Reigersberg, an officer of the First Royal Dutch hussars, in Holy Trinity church, London, it was revealed that three generations of one family have been married in a single month.

The mother of Baron Van Reigersberg's bride became Mrs. William P. Hollen at a secret wedding July 1, while her grandmother became Mrs. Stillman F. Kneeland at a fashionable wedding in Danbury, Conn., July 29.

The baroness' stepfather-in-law is a New York lawyer, interested in the stage and motion pictures. Her new step grandfather-in-law is General Kneeland, who is seventy-seven, and also a lawyer, well known in New York for nearly half a century.

Car Hits Cow; Woman Killed.

Rochester, N. Y.—Mrs. Charles Brasser of this city was killed and her husband slightly injured when the automobile the latter was driving on the road to Naples, near here, crashed into a cow. Mr. Brasser lost control of the machine and it plunged over an embankment. Mrs. Brasser was thrown out, her head striking a rock. A passing motorist brought Brasser and the body of his wife into Naples.

Eureka, Cal.—Mrs. J. Crispo, wife of a homesteader at Bigbar, awoke one morning to discover a large mountain lion crouched beside the crib where her year-old child was sleeping. The lion had entered through the open door of the tent house. Mrs. Crispo screamed, awakening her husband, who seized his rifle and fired two shots at the lion. The lion escaped.

Aged Land Turtle.

Harrisburg, Pa.—It is not often a land turtle receives recognition in a state report, but the forestry department has just received a communication from a gang of its men engaged in building a road in Mifflin county telling of the finding of a hard-shelled specimen with the date "1842" carved on its back.

Burglars Use Acid Test On the Family Silverware

A literal application of the acid test was made by burglars who ransacked the home of J. A. Gillies, Hamden, Conn., during the family's absence. The burglars carried acid with them to test the quality of the family plate and, after discarding such silverware as did not measure up to their standard took tableware valued at $3,000. Fur coats and sealskin garments were taken at their face value.

New York.—Catherine Charles, for thirty years a boarding-house proprietor, rewarded the kindness and thoughtfulness of Frank J. Hurley, a boarder, by leaving him her entire fortune of $2,066. She died June 28. Hurley is an acrobat, known on the stage as Frank Rossi.

Man Hangs Himself by Strength of Imagination

London. — Dr Henry King testified at a coroner's jury that Alfred Manning, a despondent man, planned to take his own life by hanging, and tied a handkerchief around his neck, but not tight enough to cause strangulation. The physician said that death was due to the fact that Manning had convinced himself that he was hanging himself. Through auto-suggestion the heart stopped beating.

Seiller's saleslgirls last week went on a "lark,"
At West Side Outing—Indianola Park.
Each "satin" a "Jersey" that took a swift pace
Till they reached the dotted, novelty place;
Then some took a ride on the "Crepe-de-chen,"
While others enjoyed the beach "Messaline,"
And sang, with the help of the old "organdie"
As they "sailed" along the silk "Pongee."
Then all sat at lunch, which came not amiss,
With sandwiches filled with "gingham and swiss,"
With desserts of "tricotine" and frozen "percale,"
And "dimities, calicos, laces and voile"
Then they finished with a serge of cold "tricolette"
And smiled when they had the whole "georgette."
As hours became late, with a sigh and a "twill"
They boarded their cars, and—away to the "Hill."

Last Saturday evening the Hilltop Radio Club entertained with a dinner party. Covers were laid for eight: George Martin, Floyd Gillen, Walter Baker, Paul Jones, Gilbert Hartgiss, Leonard Martin, Lawrence Hoffman, and Billy Suver aged 7 months, honorary member of the club. The dinner was served in Walter Baker's new radio station and club room, at 81 S. Oakley Ave. During the dinner the club presented Mrs. Baker with an electric heater in appreciation of the services to the club. Paul Jones made the presentation speech.

The Senior Queen Esther Circle entertained with a spread Tuesday evening at the home of Misses Edna and Lulu Meldrim, 159 Midland Ave., honoring Miss Genevieve Martindale, who leaves Thursday for El Paso, Texas, to take up her work as teacher in the Lydia Patterson Institute, and Miss Nona Stimmel, who leaves Friday for Olive Hill, Ky., to take up her work as teacher in the Home Mission School at Aiken Hall. Those present were Eta Kimes, Mary Kimes, Ethel Glick, Ruth Kohler, Mrs. Grace Wyman, Ruth Curran, Frieda Schafer, Ruth Marshall, Florence Hoak, Hazel Scofield, Goldie Six, Mrs. Jennie Phillips, Ada Walpole, Ruth Merriman, Nona Stimmel, Genevieve Martindale, Lowie Mitchel, Edna Meldrim, Lulu Meldrim.

Glenwood Tourists Camp

On our visit to Glenwood tourists' camp the past week, the folks there all seemed to be well pleased with the natural beauty and conveniences of our camp. One lady expressed herself as being so pleased with the politeness and willingness-to-assist manner of the men caring for the camp, and predicted that with up-to-date conveniences this will be one of the best camps in the country.

Following are a few reports of interviews with tourists:

M. J. Flavin and wife, of Cleveland, Ohio, stopped at Glenwood camp a couple of days. They say that as a natural site for a camp this one can't be beat. Remarked especially of its cleanliness. During their stay here had left over fifty dollars in this locality.

C. W. Hague and wife, Great Falls, Wyo., are on their way back from a tour in the east and Florida. They have a Buick. Have been 15 months on this trip and travelled about 26,000 miles. Mr. Hague says since he began using his present machine they have travelled about 127,000 miles or equal to more than five times around the world. Have been in 37 states, also Canada. Say that some of the most beautiful scenery they have seen is in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia and Shenandoah Valley. Say the natural conditions of the roads in the West are much better than the East on account of difference in rainfalls. In the Rockies there are roads up grade from 9 to 12 miles long. Have favorable impression with possibilities of our local park.

R. C. Moore and family of six started from Chicago for Florida in a Ford truck on the 8th of August, to spend the winter. They got south as far as Tennessee but had to turn back on account of rough roads, coming here where they expected to go east on the National Road, then by way of Washington City.

A. H. Bennett and R. C. Hawkin, two gamey men of Chattanooga, Tenn., are touring around in a Ford. They expect to land at Tampa, Fla., for the winter.

E. F. Swain and wife, of Berkeley, Calif. (across the bay from San Francisco) left there in a Ford, going up the coast to Porland, Ore., then up the Columbia River Highway for 50 miles of the most beautiful scenery to be found. Thence through Washington state, Montana, Idaho and Wyoming. They were 10 days in Yellowstone Park in which they traveled about 200 miles. Nearly ran into a cloudburst in Wyoming. They were also in the Grand Canyon with walls 1200 feet high on both sides of them—counted 12 eagles soaring over them there. Passed over a mountain summit at Wallace, Mont., on June 12th, where they ran into a snow bank two feet deep. Say that the roads fording streams in Wyoming are coated with concrete under the water to prevent machines from sinking in the mud. Casper, Wyo. (an oil town) has a convenient tourists camp—electric washer, gas, 8 hot plates, regular kitchen, screened in dining room, living room, piano, Victrola, writing desks, shower baths, etc., all free.

E. G. Burthard and wife of Syracuse, N. Y., stopped here after a trip through Michigan and Indiana in their Ford. Had previously been in the far West. Have traveled in all over 8,000 miles. Crossed the Great American Desert, about 500 miles wide, also over the Old Salt Lake bottom about 17 miles wide, where a new road has to be made each year on account of being washed out. They were the first to cross at the beginning of the season, the road consisting of planks laid down wide enough to admit a machine. The temperature during the day there reaches to 112 and 118, but is cool at nights. In crossing the Sierre Nevada Mountains they played snowball on the first of July, then later picked wild flowers on the same day.

Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Cromer, of Dayton, stopped here on their return from visiting the historic places in New England and the White Mountains and Adirondacks. Have been out six weeks. Have an Oakland and traveled 3,000 miles. Have an ice box attached to side of car which will hold in for two days and preserve edibles. Their tent, with bamboo poles weighs less than 25 pounds.

It has been suggested that a fine swimming pool could be made at the west end of the camp just at the foot of the park hill at Broad Street entrance by building a wall across north and south and using the natural banks on the other sides. This could be used also by West Side boys for bathing.

The regular monthly meeting of the Glenwood M. E. Ladies' Aid Society will be held at the church Thursday, Sept. 7, at 2 p. m. A good attendance is desired.

The Glenwood Women's Foreign Missionary Society will meet at the home of Mrs. G. Welch, 32 N. Oakley Ave., Tuesday afternoon, Sept. 5th, at 2 o'clock. This is the election of officers, and a large attendance is desired.

Miss Marie Hosler, Findlay, Ohio, visited Friday with her friend, Miss Marie Schoonover, 163 N. W[illegible] Ave.

THE HILLTOP BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION

Nine o'clock Wednesday, September 6, 1922, will witness the opening of the much talked of and long dreamed of Hilltop Building and Loan Association, in its new quarters on South Park Avenue, adjacent to the Hilltop Bank.

This latest Hilltop institution, it is agreed by all, will satisfy a long-felt want in this rapidly growing section of the city.

For years Hilltop men have worked and sacrificed to make the Hilltop a model community in which to live. Representative men of our community have advocated Hilltop betterment before the councils of the state, county and city, and through their efforts Hilltop people today enjoy all the privileges of a metropolitan community.

For a long time, the Hilltop has had stores and shops to supply every want and apparently all have developed into well established and profitable centers of trade. Until recently, however, in matters of finance, Hilltop citizens were compelled to seek service from down town. Then, less than two years ago, came into our community the branch bank which immediately became a success and exceeded the fondest dreams of its most sanguine supporters.

Now in the fullness of time, to supply, it would seem, the latest need of the community, comes The Hilltop Building and Loan Association. The remarkable increase in new homes on the Hilltop affords a wonderful opportunity to supply a want that is rapidly becoming acute. The men who are interested in the new loan association have built their homes here, and here have they invested their money. They have seen the Hilltop grow within a span of a few years, from a village of two thousand to a healthful suburb of more than seventeen thousand people. These men realizing that our community is largely made up of home owners who are busy, enterprising people who set aside each month a portion of their earnings for a home, determined to bring to the community building and loan service so long needed.

The new company has provided for a savings department which will pay 4% interest, and will operate upon the so-called "flexible" plan, paying 6% on deposits. Even now, before the doors are open, applications for loans have been made and requests have been made by persons wishing to obtain deposit certificates paying 6% interest.

The public is cordially invited to attend the formal opening of the new company in its quarters on South Park Avenue, Saturday afternoon and evening of September 9th, 1922, at which time refreshments will be served. Patrons should not forget, however, that while the formal opening is on Saturday, September 9th, yet the loan company will be open for business on Wednesday, September 6th, 1922.

J. W. DINSMORE,
President and Manager.
FRED W. POSTLE,
Attorney.

A Summer's Experiment

By H. IRVING KING

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Mary Kelton had just been graduated form Wellesley and Ralph Chambers had just been graduated from Harvard. All newly-fledged college graduates are very old and very wise. If you don't believe it just ask one of them. Ralph was all that a Harvard graduate should be; tall, athletic, good-looking and on speaking terms with all the "ologies." Mary was all that a graduate of Wellesley should be—tall, athletic, good-looking and on speaking terms with "ologies" of every sort—and very earnest. Together they made a couple that people turned to look after in the street. They were both orphans, likewise second cousins, and were possessed of a rich great-uncle who had so ordered their lives in advance that all they had to do in this world was to marry each other and inherit his fortune.

"It is all too utterly absurd," said Mary as she sat on the piazza of her summer hotel with Ralph. "Why, when we were little children it was, 'Mary, kiss your little husband, and Ralph, now kiss your little wife.' And it has been the same thing ever since—with the kissing omitted."

"Not always," interrupted Ralph.

"Don't be frivolous," continued Mary. "We are at a crisis of our lives and must take decided and reasonable action. Ah, Ralph, human hearts are not to be shaped, molded and controlled by an old man's whim. The soaring aspirations of the soul are not to be confined by sordid considerations of mere money, or the boundless destinies to which we were born, circumscribed by a preordained course of life."

"Quite so," replied Ralph, who was not much of an orator, but, nevertheless, able to express himself understandingly. "Quite so. I agree with you perfectly. I don't want Uncle Alexander's money. I can make money of my own. I know no end of fellows who will see that I get started right. You see, Mary, I want to carve out my own career." Ralph was so pleased with this phrase that he repeated it. "Yes—that is it; carve out my own career."

"It is noble," murmured Mary. "And what was that you said about the heart?" went on Ralph.

"I don't just remember the words, but they were all right—just the way I feel about it. Of course you know I like you immensely, Mary—always shall, for that matter. But, you see, there may be some other girl—you understand."

"And for you, Ralph," replied Mary "I have, and shall always retain, the sincerest regard. But I feel, I know, that:

"'I have another life I long to meet,
Without which life my life is incomplete.'"

"Same here," said Ralph. And then, after a minute of silence, "You don't suppose that by any chance we have already met?"

"No, no, Ralph," interposed Mary. "Be true to yourself, be true to your ideals. We have put our hands to the plow—let there be no turning back."

At this highly original phrase about the plow Ralph scratched his head thoughtfully—a bad habit of his when in doubt. He had come to this interview—arranged by Mary, who had stated beforehand the important subject to be discussed—fully, even enthusiastically, in accord with the proposed plan of action. But now, as he sat there, with the moonlight shining on the flowing river below, the night birds calling now and then from the wooded mountain side which rose behind the hotel, with a pleasant sense of Mary's proximity and the sound of her voice in his ear, he was beginning to waver. You see, he had not Mary's strength of character. Mary sensed the wavering with surprised dismay, and as became a young lady of decision, took prompt action.

"There, Ralph," said she, rising, "your hand. We are friends always. But the stars of our destinies lead us in different paths. Good-night."

"Quite right, quite right. Good-night," said Ralph.

The summer days sped on. Ralph threw himself avidly into all the gayeties afforded by the hotel life, and was one of all coaching parties, auto parties and yachting parties on the river. Mary confined herself to the society of her chaperon—an impecunious relative furnished by Uncle Alexander—and to that of such of the guests as she suspected of being "intellectual" and "serious." She and Ralph saw each other every day, sometimes several times a day, but there were no more moonlight conferences.

The belle of the hotel was a very young widow, with lots of money and soulful eyes—an alluring combination. Ralph, being seen now and then in her company, "people began to talk," and Mary expressed her satisfaction that her dear friend had so soon found his soulmate. Yet she felt it her duty now and then to drop him the warning, "Ralph, remember, be true to your ideals."

Among the "intelligentia" at the hotel whose society Mary affected was a Professor Chase—professor from one of the smaller colleges—forty, single, slightly bald and exceedingly erudite. Everybody said Professor Chase was just the man for Mary.

Mary's duenna was a discreet old lady, who never openly interfered or advised. But she kept Uncle Alexander informed by almost daily letters how matters stood with his wards. At first the old man flew into a rage, but on second thought quieted down and said: "Young fools. Well, let 'em go it." He was a shrewd person. Ralph now almost snubbed the widow, sought the society of other men, and indulged in long, meditative walks in the woods. The widow did not seem to mind it.

Mary began to fear that the professor had a sad, worldly and mercenary strain in him. She was sure of it when she saw him so often now by the side of Ralph's neglected widow—though what the two could find to talk about in common for her part she could not imagine. It was evident that both she and Ralph had yet a long search before them before they should find their "complementary souls." And now the season drew to its close. Already the guests were beginning to leave the hotel, and the leaves upon the maples were turning to red and gold and bronze. The time had come when, by orders of Uncle Alexander, they were to leave the hotel and pay a visit to that estimable relative at his home.

Upon the occasion of that visit the young people had arranged they were to announce to the venerable Alexander the fact of their emancipation and the dissolution of all his plans for the future. On the evening before they were to leave Ralph and Mary met by appointment to formulate their pronunciamento to Uncle Alexander—met in that same secluded nook of the hotel piazza where had taken place the great star of destiny conference. "It's a beautiful night," said Ralph.

"Beautiful," replied Mary. "How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon yon bank."

"Don't it?" said Ralph. "Mary, Mary, have you found that—what did you call it—that other life—yet?"

"No, Ralph, not yet. One must sometimes seek through all the world for that—and you—have you found—how did you phrase it—'that other girl' yet?"

"Oh, Mary," said Ralph, "there's only one girl in all the world for me—and you know it."

Mary gasped and then, after a moment's silence, laid her hand gently upon Ralph's arm and said, in a low voice: "Well, Ralph, perhaps Uncle Alexander knows best after all."

With a cry of delight Ralph—but why proceed? The moon itself hid behind a cloud just then.

Everybody Said Professor Chase Was Just the Man for Mary.

Life on Planets.

The possible existence of life on the planets has lately been discussed in a most interesting manner by American astronomers. This is a summary of the conclusions of three scientists upon the question:

It is considered that the existence of a high form of life on the moon, Jupiter, Saturn, Mercury, Uranus or Neptune, is extremely improbable. Although Venus greatly resembles the earth, it is generally believed by astronomers that the day and the year of the planet are of equal duration. In that case no life can exist upon it. Concerning Mars, astronomers are not agreed as to whether the much-discussed markings are canals or merely earthquake cracks. There are no permanent bodies of water on the planet. The best that can be said is that, although the temperature on Mars is very low, there may be on the planet, to a limited extent, the conditions essential to life; probably only vegetable and low-order animal life, but no beings of intelligence.

Hardest Known Wood.

The very cross-grained lignum-vitae is the hardest wood known. It is the only wood that can be used for the bearings at the stern end of the propeller shafts of steamers and nearly every large steamship is dependent upon a block of lignum-vitae for a smooth-running screw. The fibers of this wood weave back and forth, crossing and recrossing each other in a manner that resembles the weave of an automobile tire. Round rulers are sometimes made of this wood of the tangled grain; so were rolling pins and chisel handles until its value for bearings in machinery was discovered.

Texas Town Claims Antiquity.

A tradition which has been handed down through many generations of West Texas and New Mexican pioneers has it that the little town of Ysleta, Tex., 18 miles southeast of El Paso, is the oldest settlement in the United States.

According to this tradition, Ysleta was founded in 1540 by Don Francisco Vasques Coronado, famed Spanish explorer. This would make Ysleta twenty-five years older than St. Augustine Florida, which is accredited as being the oldest city in this country.

Yet there are no official records to substantiate the theory of Ysleta's antiquity. It is old, the oldest town in Texas, no doubt, but its origin is traceable only as far back as 1682 authoritatively.

According to church records at Ysleta, the town was founded by Antonio Otermin, Spanish governor of New Mexico, about the year 1682.

Money Lost Last Winter Found in Potato Field

Miller Ressler, a farmer, of Eden township, Pa., lost his pocketbook early last winter. He advertised for it in the newspapers and made personal inquiry without results. He mourned $80 as a dead loss. A little girl hunting potato bugs found the wallet in a field a few days ago. The notes were sent to a bank at Quarryville, Pa., for reclemption.

Old Nursery Rhymes.

Some of the commonest nursery rhymes, which are taught to each succeeding generation of youngsters, are of as great antiquity as many of the most celebrated poems and novels of English letters.

"Sing a Song of Sixpence" was composed during the Sixteenth century. "Three Children Sliding on the Ice" dates from 1539. "London Bridge Is Falling Down" is apparently almost as old as the city itself. "Pussy Cat, Pussy Cat, Where Have You Been?" was written during the reign of Queen Elizabeth. "Lucy Locket Lost Her Pocket" came into being when Charles II reigned.

Over the Radiophone

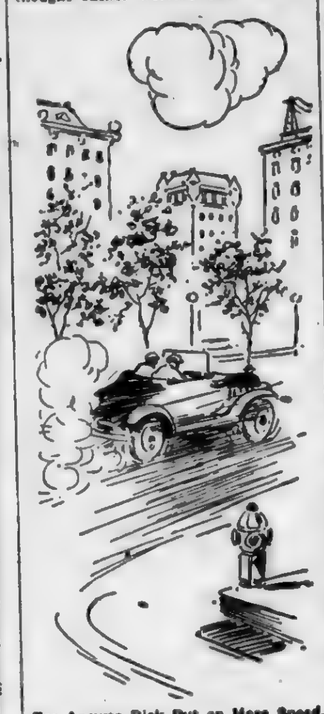
By FRANK H. WILLIAMS

(©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)



Although Ted Cowles feared that he had lost out to his rival, Howard Wilkens, in his race for the heart and hand of his old-time schoolmate, Mary Johnson, he nevertheless listened in on her radiophone concerts every evening.

Ted and Mary had together become greatly interested in radio while attending college, and Ted had at first been delighted when upon their return to their home town Mary had been given a contract to sing three times a week for the local broadcasting station, which was managed by Wilkens. But this delight had soon changed to jealous rage when he saw the apparent interest with which Mary welcomed Wilkens' advances.

Of late Ted hadn't seen much of Mary—she had been so busy with her concert work and with the attentions which Wilkens showered upon her that there hadn't been time in which to see her old school friend.

So that evening Ted sulked in his boarding-house room and almost determined not to listen in on Mary's concert, in spite of the fact that she had sent him a little personal note telling him that she was going to sing some new songs this evening and making a special request that he listen to her.

Ted stared glumly at his receiving set. What in the world could she see in Wilkens? Wilkens was unscrupulous, hard, brutal. Ted felt that he could read character, and it was his opinion that, if pressed, there was almost nothing at which Wilkens would stop. For instance, Ted in his bitterness told himself that if Wilkens knew about the money Ted now had in his room, there'd be nothing Wilkens wouldn't do to get it. This thought rather worried Ted. It was a big sum of money, $7,000, and it wasn't his. It was all in the shape of unregistered Liberty bonds and Ted was forced to keep it overnight in his room. He had received it that day in a business transaction for the firm of which he was treasurer and the big vault at the local bank had jammed shut that afternoon and would have to be opened on the morrow by experts.

Ted felt that he didn't really need to worry and yet he did worry. He worried about the money and he worried about Mary, with whom he was very deeply in love. But there was nothing to be gained from simply worrying, so Ted tuned his receiving apparatus and started to listen in on the evening's entertainment from the broadcasting station where Mary was employed, about a mile from Ted's boarding house.

Mary was singing when the first sounds came to Ted over the radiophone. He clenched his fists at the words.

"I love you truly, truly, truly, dear," came Mary's sweet, thrilling voice.

So this was why she wanted him to listen in. This was her way of notifying him that she had definitely decided to take Wilkens. All the world went black to Ted at this thought. He wanted to hear no more. He reached up to take the receivers from his ears.

But now the song broke off suddenly.

A sound of commotion in the broadcasting station came to Ted over the radiophone. Then a high-pitched scream. Then—

"Help! Help!" screamed a voice that was surely Mary's, changed by terror that it was so different.

Mary in danger!

Ted dashed the receivers from his ears and leaped to his feet. He must reach her as quickly as possible. And even then he might be too late!

Ted's room was on the top floor of the boarding house. Down the stairs he raced to the room of Dick Thompson on the first floor.

"Quick, get your car!" Ted cried to Dick, dashing in on the latter. "I'll tell you why as we go along."

Dick was an eager young fellow, always ready for excitement or adventure, so he needed no urging.

Soon they were scurrying down the street in Dick's speedy little roadster.

"You know where the broadcasting station is?" inquired Ted, following his recital of just what had happened.

"It is in that tall building near the far end of Calhoun street, isn't it?" said Dick in response.

"Yes," said Ted. "We ought to see it in a minute now."

For a moment there was silence in the car as they forged onward. Then a little exclamation came from Ted as they turned a corner.

"That's it!" he exclaimed, involuntarily extending his hands toward a tall building visible ahead.

For answer Dick put on more speed.

But another queer exclamation came from Ted as he placed his hand compellingly on Dick's shoulder.

"Do you see that light—top of the building?" cried Ted. "There it is—now it's gone again!"

"Sure, I see it," Dick replied. "Why?"

"Wait. Slow down," demanded Ted. "It can't be— Yes, by Jove, it is!"

For a few minutes Ted watched the flickering light in apparent fascination, his hand resting heavily all the time on Dick's shoulder and indicating by its pressure the high tension of excitement under which he was laboring.

Suddenly Ted turned to Dick, his face drawn with excitement.

"Turn around—hurry back—quick! Quick!" Ted fairly yelled.

Ted saw Dick gaze at him in astonishment.

"Why turn back?" queried Dick. "There's no excitement there. I thought you said the excitement was at this broadcasting station?"

"Quick! You'll find out why soon enough. Hurry back—hurry!" cried Ted in response.

There was something so compelling in Ted's voice and so certain in the way he spoke that Dick obeyed. In a moment more they were scurrying back to their starting point at an even greater speed than they had left it.

"Keep quiet. Follow me. Be ready for a fight!" admonished Ted as he led the way into the house and started creeping up the stairs to his room.

The door to Ted's room was shut, but not locked. As the two young men stood outside the door listening intently there came the sound of movement inside the room.

Suddenly, without warning, Ted threw open the door, reached in and switched on the lights.

A man who was bending over a drawer in the bureau, holding a pocket flashlight in one hand and a bunch of Ted's Liberty bonds in the other, looked up startled. Ted's pulses raced as he saw that the man was Wilkens.

For just a moment the tableau remained static. Then, with a leap, Ted closed with Wilkens.

The fight was soon over. In a comparatively short time Wilkens was beaten.

Dick telephoned for the patrol wagon. While Dick did this Ted called up the radiophone station. A broad smile spread over his face as he talked over the phone.

When Wilkens was taken away Ted hung up the receiver and turned happily to Dick.

"It's us for the broadcasting building again," said Ted to Dick. Dick said nothing until they were once more on their way.

"How did you know that a guy was trying to swipe those bonds?" Dick demanded.

"It was a message from that broadcasting building," explained Ted. "That light was a message from Mary Johnson telling me Wilkens was going to steal the bonds."

"How did she know about it?" demanded Dick.

"She partly guessed it, she told me over the phone just now," said Ted. "And her intuition was right, too. You see, this evening Wilkens told her he'd heard I had the bonds early in the day, but that now they were missing and that I would be arrested in the morning charged with taking them. As she had perfect faith in me, she thought this was a frame-up on Wilkens' part to hurt me. Then, while she was giving her radiophone concert he dragged her away and bound and gagged her and threw her in a storeroom. She figured that he did this for the purpose of getting me to the station—as he knew I'd be listening in on the concert and would naturally hurry to help Mary when she screamed for help. She also figured that while I was gone from my room Wilkens would come to the room and swipe the bonds. She managed to break out of her bonds, get to the roof and send that signal with a mirror and with the aid of the light from a street lamp. She thought I might see it and turn back in time to catch Wilkens in the act. And I did!"

"But just why are you so happy about all this?" demanded Dick. "You haven't told me that."

"Well, you see," smiled Ted, "she also told me she'd turned Wilkens down earlier in the evening and that a song she sang tonight was intended for me alone."

"What was the song?" demanded Dick.

"That would be telling!" smiled Ted again.

But he started humming, "I love you truly, truly, dear."

Texas Sergeant in the Philippines Gives Life Fluid to Aid British Officer.

Manila, P. I.—Sergt. Andrew H. Penlang of Corpus Christi, Tex., stationed with the medical detachment here, gave more than ten ounces of blood in a transfusion operation in an attempt to save the life of Admiral John E. Dunmareeq of the British navy, it was announced at army headquarters here.

Sergt. Penlang was thanked by British Consul General Harrington.

Needle in Baby's Back.

Paintsville, Ky.—A needle two inches long was taken from the back of the year-old baby girl of Mr. and Mrs. Montford Dixon of this city by its mother. The baby had been in delicate health for some time, and what was thought to be a boil appeared on its back and a physician was called. The next day while the mother was dressing the wound she found the needle.

German Poison Kills After Four Years.

Berwick, Pa.—A drink of water from a well poisoned by the Germans in France more than four years ago recently caused the death of Emil Wright, thirty years old, of this place, following an illness which began before the war ended. Wright filled his canteen at a well left by retreating Germans and became ill soon after drinking of the water.

"Dope Fiends" Path Is Made Much Harder by Safeguards on Blanks.

Washington, D. C.—Stringent regulations to prevent "dope users" from obtaining narcotics on stolen blanks have been issued by Internal Revenue Commissioner Blair. All agents and other persons registered under the Harrison narcotic law were instructed to report immediately the numbers of any stolen or lost order forms. The new orders, it was explained, were issued as another means of closing the door to the illegal use of narcotics.

DOGS CAN'T LIVE ON ISLAND

Animals Brought to Tract in Mississippi River Near Biloxi, Miss., Do Not Survive.

Biloxi, Miss.—For some mysterious reason dogs cannot live on Ship island, 18 miles off this port. This fact is borne out by old residents, who frequently have attempted to keep dogs, only to lose them after a short stay. Some medical authorities believe the dogs become affected with chigga, a disease which is said to originate from the island sand.

...Y HAS NEW COMBAT PLANE

Meets Every Requirement of Fighting in Connection With Fleet Operations.

CAN LAND ON DECK OR WATER

TS Type Tested Out, Winning High Praise From Government Experts—Equals Any Combat Plane Now in Use.

Washington.—A shipplane designed to meet every requirement of combat and pursuit in connection with fleet operations, of navy design and built at the naval aircraft factory, Philadelphia, is undergoing final tests at the Anacostia air station here under the supervision of the bureau of aeronautics, navy department.

Another plane of the same type was recently completed by the Curtiss company at Garden City, L. I., and will shortly be flown to Anacostia for further tests.

The tests on the new plane of navy design, called a TS, have been uniformly satisfactory, and naval aviation experts consider it as good a combat plane as any in use by military services from land bases. In addition to operating from a land base, this plane can be quickly converted into the sea type by substituting pontoons for the wheel landing gear.

A statement prepared by the bureau of aeronautics concerning the need for such a plane describes the TS as follows:

Analysis of the Design.

The function of the combat plane is to protect our own aircraft by destroying or dispersing the enemy aircraft. With the development of aircraft carriers to a point where they are now recognized as an essential arm of the naval force, it has been necessary to tackle the problem to be solved in producing suitable designs of aircraft to operate from the carriers. These problems in a few words included the following questions:

How to evolve aircraft of the various types and possessing the following qualities: (a) Best performance, (b) greatest radius of action, (c) smallest dimensions, (d) best adapted to handling and stowage on board ship, and operating from a ship or airdrome.

It must be speedy and have superior qualities of maneuverability and stability; it must be lightly constructed but rugged.

The TS, which the new plane has been designated, in recent tests, has demonstrated all of the above qualities in a manner extremely satisfactory to government experts, and it is expected that quantity production on this type will go ahead within the near future.

The plane is equipped with a Lawrence 200 h. p. air-cooled motor, which is the highest-powered air-cooled motor built in the country. The construction of the wings is such as to permit of rapid assembly.

Lands on Deck or Water.

A standard equipment of two types of landing gear is provided, viz., wheels for landing on the deck of carriers or on land and pontoons for landing on the water. Both types of landing gear will be supplied so that the rapid conversion from landplane to seaplane may be effected. This is one of the most noteworthy features of the craft in that it will double its usefulness and make possible land operations by combat planes based on the fleet as well as providing a swift fighting seaplane equipped for making landings on the water.

The naval battle of the future will depend largely on gaining and maintaining control of the air. Spotting, scouting and observation from aircraft will give to that fleet possessing these facilities an advantage that will be practically decisive. The torpedo plane has also entered into naval problems within the past two years to an extent that places an entirely new complexion on this method of attack. But all of these invaluable aids to the successful outcome of the naval battle are dependent on the combat plane that is able to take the air in sufficient numbers and with sufficiently superior fighting qualities to sweep enemy aircraft before it.

The new TS combat plane gives every prospect of fulfilling these exacting conditions.

KILLED BY RACING HORSE

Spectator Trampled to Death When Animal Dashes Into Crowd at Race Meet.

Loraine, Tex.—William Lefever, nineteen, was killed and three others injured here when a horse ridden by Poley McGee at a race meet left the track and ran into the spectators. McGee, Sam Williams and Lem Fowler suffered internal injuries. Their condition is serious.

Tailors' Shears Get Heirlooms.

London.—Shawls and delicate laces coming down in the family for generations are being hauled forth from cedar chests and sent to the modiste to be made into summer wraps. Lucky the woman who owns a thin silk India shawl and a length of fine lace. The two combined, with perhaps bands of crepe marocain added, will form a stunning cloak for wear over a summer gown.

STRIKE COST IS HEAVY

Loss to Labor in 1921, Due to Disputes, Was $132,000,000.

Survey Indicates 10,000,000 Man Hours Lost Daily in Disturbance—Building Trades Lead, With Printers Second.

New York.—The loss of time due to strikes in the present year will undoubtedly exceed that of last year, according to figures compiled by the National Industrial Conference Board, 10 East Thirty-ninth street. The board estimates that at present 1,250,000 workers are idle because of strikes in various industries, entailing a direct loss of approximately 10,000,000 man hours of work each day.

There were 2,267 strikes and lockouts in the United States in 1921, says the board report, or less than any of the five preceding years. The number of strikes brought to the attention of the bureau of labor statistics in 1916 was 3,789; in 1917, 4,450; in 1918, 3,353; in 1919, 3,577, and in 1920, 3,254. The number of persons involved in 1,587 of the strikes and 95 of the lockouts reported in 1921 was 1,085,653.

The total duration of 1,409 of the strikes and 70 of the lockouts last year was 60,165 days. The average duration of the strikes in 1921 was 60 days. Estimating the average wage of the workers in these strikes and lockouts at $2 a day, the total loss of wages alone due to this number of labor disputes in 1921 would be about $132,000,000.

Two and a half times as many strikes occurred in the first half of the years as in the last half, says the report, the largest being that of the marine workers in May, involving about 140,000 strikers and embracing all the principal ports of the United States. Of the total number of labor disturbances during the year, 1,527 were in the section north of the Ohio and east of the Mississippi, New York state leading the country with 350, Pennsylvania second with 203 and Massachusetts third with 198. As usual, the board states, New York city led among cities with 180 strikes and lockouts, followed by Chicago with 89, Philadelphia with 49 and Boston with 43.

"Considered by industry groups, the building trades in 1921 led all others with 508 strikes and lockouts," the report says. "Printing and publishing came second with 473 such disturbances, the clothing industry was third with 202, and the metal trades were fourth with 183. In 1920 also the building trades led with a total of 511 strikes and lockouts, while in 1919, 1918, 1917 and 1916 that doubtful distinction belonged to the metal trades, with totals of 581, 411, 515 and 547, respectively.

"In the last three years an increasingly large proportion of strikes and lockouts have been settled in favor of the employers, while in the preceding three years, when the war was still in progress, the reverse was true. This may be said to reflect the declining power of the labor organizations in the years following the war."

TAKES JUDGE'S NAME IN SPITE

Purse Snatcher Seeks to Get Even With Court for Jail Sentence.

New York.—In 1916 Samuel Gumpel was arraigned before Magistrate Gibbs in the Bronx county court charged with pocketbook snatching. Judge Gibbs sent him to Elmira.

Apparently to spite Judge Gibbs, Gumpel has since assumed his name. Recently when arraigned as Joseph Gibbs before Magistrate Max S. Levine in Washington Heights court, charged with vagrancy, a prohibition officer reported this to be the fact.

The magistrate sentenced the prisoner to four months in the workhouse saying:

"You have assumed the name of one of the most highly respected judges in New York city. I'll give you four months in the workhouse so you can think of another name to use."

ENGLISH DEATH RATE LOWER

Vital Statistics Also Show New High Record for Births in 1920.

London.—The year 1920 furnished several records in vital statistics, according to the annual report of the registrar-general of England and Wales. Births totaled 957,782, a new high record. Deaths numbered 466,130, or a rate of 12.4 a thousand of population. This is the lowest death rate since 1862, when the population was only half that of 1920. Infant mortality was the lowest recorded, the rate being eighty per thousand births.

Marriages totaled 379,982, also a record. The natural increase in population was 491,632, the largest ever recorded. Divorces were nearly three times the number of any year prior to 1919.

Pulled Automobile Off Battling Goat's Horn

In his shining new automobile, E. A. Weathers of San Diego, Cal., drove deep into the foothills and parked in a quiet lane. A goat stalked near and gazed inquiringly at his reflection, distorted by the curved body. A bleat brought no response. Then he lowered his curled horns and charged. Weathers pulled the machine off one of the goat's horns and the animal strolled away. Repairs to the car cost $50.

The family of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Carter held a family reunion at their home, 69 North Hague avenue. Those present from out of the city were: Mr. and Mrs. Harry Holroyd and son, James, Steubenville; Mr. and Mrs. Wm Mohn and family, Grove City. All of the family were present but Mr. Harley Carter.

Mrs. C. L. McKenney and Miss Goldie Six entertained with a miscellaneous shower in honor of Miss Cecile Six, Tuesday evening. There were thirty-five present. An enjoyable evening was spent by all after which dainty refreshments were served by the hostesses. The bride-elect was the recipient of many beautiful gifts.

Mr. and Mrs. Allen T. Hoar, 31 North Park avenue, announce the marriage of their daughter, Cora Louise, to Mr. Virgil Irvin Cone, son of Mrs. A. M. Cone of Hamilton, Ohio, on Saturday, September 2. Miss Leona Warren of Saginaw, Mich., served as maid of honor and Mr. Vivian Adler was best man. Ruth Keegan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Keegan, 59 East Patterson avenue, was flower girl. After September 12 Mr. and Mrs. Cone will be at home at 72 North Park avenue.

Members of Sunset Literary Club entertained last week at the home of Mrs. J. R. Sheeders, 2133 West Broad street, honoring Mrs. J. M. Ater, who left Friday to take up her residence in Canton, Ohio. Mrs. Ater is a past president of the club and for eleven years has been one of the active members. Mrs. G. C. Woodin, who with her husband and two sons recently returned from a five weeks' motoring tour in which they covered 2125 miles, gave an entertaining talk concerning the trip. Mrs. Sheeders read a diary kept while motoring to Milwaukee, Wis. All responded with vacation echoes. Twenty guests were present.

The Wisslohichen Camp Club, composed of Hilltop people, dedicated their new camp on Big Darby last Monday. hey had big parade on the Hilltop, led by a brass band and followed by members and friends of the club. They now have ten cottages completed.

The J. R. B. Sunday School Class of Glenwood M. E. Church will hold their regular monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. G. C. Woodin, 179 S. Richardson Ave., on Tuesday evening, Sept. 12th. Assisting hostesses will be Mesdames Willbarger, Wyman, Wright and Wells.

Let all J. R. B.'s be present as there will be election of officers for the ensuing year.

The D. F. O. Class of Glenwood Sunday School gave a surprise kitchen shower in honor of their past teacher, Miss Cecile Six. The present teacher, Mrs. Mayer, accompanied the girls. A very pleasant evening was spent. The guests departed at a late hour wishing her much happiness.

Owing to absence of the President, Mrs. Welch, the meeting of the Hilltop W. C. T. U. will not be held until Tuesday evening, Sept. 12, at the home of Mrs. R. E. Spring, 141 S. Warren Ave. All of the members are cordially invited to be present. Several new members are to be taken in.

Glenwood Tourists Camp

A caretaker of the park taking register of one of the tourists stopping there, asked him what was his license number, and he replied by saying that they had left it at home and forgot the number; then turning to his wife, asked her if she remembered their marriage license number.

Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Ryan left this city October 7, 1921, touring the western states en route to Phoenix, Ariz., stopping for the winter months. The altitude at that place is about the same as here, but the arid climate of Phoenix and Tucson are very favorable to tubercular persons. In March of this year they continued their journey westward, passing through the pertified forests near Holbrook, Aris., the "chips" of which when polished make beautiful settings for jewelry. They were amased with the wonders of the Yosemite Valley and the scenic beauty of the Columbia river Highway. At Portland, Ore., one night about 400 tourists were encamped. They gave an interesting description of the Mormons and their magnificent temple at Salt Lake City, Utah. A collie dog joined them soon after leaving Phoenix and has proved a loyal companion. They are returning to Marietta, Ohio.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Farnsworth, of Denver, Colo., traveling the Golden Rod, through Colorado and D. L. D. Highways through Nebraska, report goodroads and satisfactory travel. Many camps en route, some equipped with conveniences for tourists. One of especial notice near Springfield, Ill., named Washington Park, was beautified by a landscape garden. They think one great need to be supplied tourists is more definite guides to assist in locating camps. They are traveling to Cambridge.

Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Willever of Hilton, N. J., are traveling across the continent in a camp car, a veritable house on wheels, equipped with cook stove, water tank, regfrigerator, graphophone, spring cots, clothes closet, besides many cubby holes reached from the outside of car. The finest camp thus far on their route was located near St. Clairsville, Ohio, the ground being donated by the Masonic organization. Their destination is California with indefinite termination.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Manchester and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Purviance and daughter of Springfield, Ill., are traveling to Washington, D. C., over the National Highway. Tourists camps along the way make travel very satisfactory and the outdoor life very pleasant, when weather is favorable.

Mr. Ralph Hosler, Cleveland, Ohio, was a guest over Labor Day at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Schoonover, 163 N. Warren Ave.

Rev. J. R. Edwards is preaching every night at the Cypress Avenue Holiness Church. He gives his life story Sunday afternoon at two-thirty. Mr. Edwards was a bartender and saloon keeper for nine years, but is now a mighty preacher.

Just after Mrs. Anna Belle Davis of 129 North Wheatland avenue, had been notified that her stepfather, Mr. Amos Reed, 76, retired carpenter, had died at St. Anthony's Hospital, Thursday morning, August 31, word came to her that her husband, David J. Davis, 43, had been stricken with heart trouble while on his way to work and had died before medical aid could reach him.

Both men died within three hours. Davis, who was employed at the State House as a stationary engine fireman, was in his usual health when he left home. At Broad street and Wheatland avenue he became ill and was carried into No. 17 Engine House where he died. He had been ill since last summer when he had a sunstroke.

He leaves his widow, two daughters, Florence, 4, Cora Annabell, 2; one son, John Davis, in California, four brothers and two sisters.

HILL CREST BAPTIST

If you are a member of this church, won't you do your best to be present Sunday. Let us begin the fall campaign with enthusiasm. Will you do your best?

Morning Worship, 10:30. Subject not announced this week.

Evening Service, 7:30.

Mr. Knox desires that every member of the choir shall be present morning and evening.

GLENWOOD METHODIST

Sunday evening at 10:30 the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be observed. This important service, commemorating the sacrifice of our Christ, ought to be attended by all of the people.

Next Sunday has been designated as "Child Culture Sunday" by the Columbus Federation of Churches. It has been requested that our pastors and churches present the cause of child education. Because of this movement in the interest of children the pastor will speak Sunday evening on "What Shall We Do For The Children?"

ST. JOHN'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH

Divine service both morning and evening at 10:30 and 7:30.

The Ladies' Aid Society meets on next Wednesday with Mrs. Howard, Richardson Ave.

THE HOGE MEMORIAL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

9:15 A. M., Bible School. Rally Day will be held September 23rd.

10:30 A. M., Morning Worship and Sermon: "Education for What?" Special Music.

7:30 P. M., Evening Worship and Sermon: "What Doth the Lord Require?" Special Music.

If you have no church home, attend here. Find your friends and join with us. Many have found it wise and good to join with us. Why not you also? We welcome you.

Tonight (Thursday) the pastor, Rev. Richard E. Shields, and family will entertain the Elders and their wives at the Manse, 2503 West Broad Street.

HIGHLAND AVE. FRIENDS

Morning—Rev. Edward Escobne of Michigan will preach.

Evening—Sermon by pastor.

A cordial invitation is extended to all.

THE HILLTOP LUTHERAN CHURCH

10:30, Public Worship. Sermon by pastor. The vacation time is over. Now for full attendance and aggressive work.

The Ladies' Aid and Missionary Society will meet in the church on Wednesday afternoon, Sept. 13th. Every member is urged to be present. Come early. The Friendly Church on the Corner.

MEMORIAL BAPTIST CHURCH

Dr. G. R. Robbins will preach on the following subjects: A. M., "No More Sea." P. M., "Christ Will Make All Things New."

The Lord's Supper at close of the morning sermon. Mr. Carl Fulton will sing by request, "Flee to the Hill Tops."

Dr. G. R. Robbins, wife, daughter and Miss Greiser left Asbury Park, N. Y., last Monday and expect to be home Friday. They report a fine vacation. Dr. Robbins has only preached part of the time, but in some of the finest Baptist churches in New Jersey, Clinton Avenue, First Asbury Park, N. J., and The Peddie Memorial Baptist Church, Newark, N. J. The latter is not only one of the most stately and spacious in New Jersey, but in the Baptist denomination. Though the congregation is wealthy and cultivated, but has old-fashioned religion, not ashamed to say "amen" during the prayer and sermon. Dr. Robbins will occupy his pulpit Sunday in Memorial. Miss Robbins and Miss Greiser open the School of Music Saturday of this week.

Arthur J. Brentlinger, 52 South Wheatland avenue, and Albert J. Frech, 412 South Seventeenth street, were appointed lieutenants in the fire department Saturday, by Safety Director McCune, to succeed John A. Edington and Max M. L. Stuart, who have been promoted to be captains. Brentlinger is a fireman at No. 10 engine house and French at No. 1. Grover C. Johnson received the same grade in his promotional examination as Frech, but the latter was placed ahead of Johnson on the eligible list because he filed his application first, a civil service ruling.

JOHN D. ENIGMA TO NEIGHBORS

Richest Man Rarely Seen in Tarrytown and Is Guarded From All Questioners.

GIVES CAMERAMEN A CHANCE

Recently He Let Photographers Shoot Him to Heart's Content, but Reporters Still Are Barred—Stories About Dimes.

Tarrytown, N. Y.—Is John D. Rockefeller, passing the Indian summer of his life on his vast estate in the Pocantico hills, at last letting down the barriers he has always raised against photographers and reporters?

This is a question which has been interesting the newspaper profession ever since the world's richest man, on a recent Sunday, permitted camera men to snap him to their heart's content after they had consented to follow him into church for service.

Mr. Rockefeller, who bears the reputation of being one of the most camera-shy men in America, may be becoming more lenient in his attitude toward photographers, but as yet he has given no indication of taking reporters into his confidence.

An effort to interview Mr. Rockefeller on the recent occasion of his eighty-fourth birthday anniversary—made, as usual, through a third party representing the household—brought the response "Impossible." As no reporters as yet have succeeded in storming the well-guarded gates of the Rockefeller home, the modern Croesus goes uninterviewed.

Enigma to Fellow Townsmen.

Even to his townsmen the little man, slight of frame, who appears in mid-summer in leather waistcoat, over coat and muffler, is very much of an enigma.

Tarrytown points out to each visitor the home of John D. Rockefeller, urges the visitor to go up and see where Rockefeller lives, talks constantly about Rockefeller—but rarely sees him itself.

Very seldom do Tarrytowners get inside the gates which guard the big home back in the hills. Once in a while they see John D. come downtown and sit in his machine while a chauffeur goes into a bank or a store—but Tarrytown almost never talks to its richest citizen. He comes and goes—there is excitement while he is downtown, and discussion afterward. And that is all of Tarrytown's claim on its most famous citizen.

Ever since the oil king celebrated his eighth-fourth anniversary Tarrytown has been seething over the question of who is its oldest citizen. There is no question as to the most famous.

An ancient who sits in front of the big hardware store just around the corner from the station concedes first place to John D. The ancient admits he is only eighty-three. But an Italian has asserted his grandfather is eighty-eight, and there is a farmer who lays claim to ninety. Still, even in the face of odds Tarrytown stands loyally behind its prominent citizen and announces to the world that its oldest citizen today is none other than the man who made oil famous.

But the town maintains that Mr. Rockefeller is still a youngster in spirit.

"Any man who plays golf as frequently as he does," began one citizen, when he was interrupted with a question as to whether John D's. private links were regular size.

"Certainly, but John D. goes around slowly," replied the citizen, but another Tarrytowner broke in with a denial.

"It is not. It is only about four holes of a normal course. And John D. takes three hours to make two of 'em."

Last but not least, in Tarrytown's viewpoint toward its leading citizen is the tradition of the dimes, the day of days for the boys and girls. Spasmodically John D. Rockefeller gives 10-cent pieces away to children. How did it start?

Stories About Dimes.

Three stories are current:

Number 1—Three boys, many years ago, walked up the hill, climbed the stone wall, went up to the porch and saw Mr. Rockefeller. They asked him for a dime apiece—and got it. Since then, it is said, the oil magnate has held his yearly party.

Number 2—A boy was standing downtown when the Rockefeller machine drove up. A package dropped out. The boy picked it up and handed it to Mr. Rockefeller personally. The boy got a dime and John D. Rockefeller got an inspiration which he has followed ever since.

Number 3—A lad was lost. He wandered onto the Rockefeller mystery links. The oil king saw him. He took him into the house, gave him a dime and sent him home. And the 10-cent party sprang from that.

Whatever the cause, "dime day" has become to the youth of Tarrytown a day apart, ranking with Christmas and the Fourth of July.

Horse Kick Breaks Baby's Jaw.

Bay City, Mich.—Edward Haritler, three-year-old son of William Haritler of Linwood, had his right jaw broken when kicked by a horse. The boy was playing in his grandfather's barnyard and toddled unnoticed to the rear of a skittish horse hitched to a wagon. He will recover.

Lad, Asleep, Steals Ride on Front of Locomotive

Hammonton, N. J.—When a Pennsylvania railroad bridge train from Atlantic City passed through here at high speed last night the motionless form of a lad was seen on the front of the engine. When the train stopped at Broad street station, Philadelphia, railroad officials found the body of a boy seventeen years old lying inert on the fore part of the locomotive.

He was alive, but asleep, and had made the ride, almost 70 miles, in this dangerous position, sometimes rushing through the darkness at 70 miles an hour.

The passenger was Frederick Herbert of Shawnee, Okla., homeward bound without the formality of paying regular rates. The Philadelphia police took the nervy lad in tow.

PARIS MECCA OF DIVORCE HUNTERS

Americans and Other Foreigners Are Taking Advantage of Easy French Laws.

SECRECY IS THE CHIEF FACTOR

American Lawyer in Paris Declares the Whole Divorce Situation in France an Abuse and Scandal—Grounds for Decree.

Paris.—The increasing number of divorces obtained in Paris by prominent Americans and other foreigners seeking relief from matrimonial infelicity has led to many inquiries as to why the French capital apparently has become such a European Reno for discontented spouses.

The chief magnet appears to lie in the fact that divorce proceedings may be brought in French courts with silent ease and completed without even friends and acquaintances becoming aware, at least through the medium of French newspapers, that there has been the slightest ripple on the sea of domesticity. Publication of such proceedings by native newspapers is a criminal offense, on the ground of lowering public morals. The newspapers may print the names of those involved, if they can obtain them, and the fact that a divorce has been granted, but nothing more.

Recent publicity in the United States of some divorces of Americans in Paris has caused an unpleasant feeling of apprehension among attorneys for others who have been contemplating divorce action. Several cases of Americans are reported to have been taken to Tours, Rennes and other provincial cities, both for the still greater seclusion offered and because the provincial court calendars are not so crowded as are those in Paris.

Must Establish Residence.

Provisional decrees usually may be obtained in France in from one to three months, and final decrees 50 days thereafter. The complainant must establish residence in France, but a declaration that he intends to stay indefinitely is held to be sufficient, or the inclusion among his papers of a year's lease on an apartment. The second essential condition is that the defendant must appear before the court in person, or through counsel if he is a resident of France. But if the defendant lives outside the country, as is the case of Americans, notice must be given through the state department.

There are three grounds for divorce in France: adultery, conviction of a felony and cruelty. Both physical violence and mental anguish are accepted under the heading of cruelty. Neither party to a divorce is allowed to remarry in France within ten months, because of the question of custody and sustenance for the children.

"The whole divorce situation in France, from the American viewpoint, is an abuse and a scandal," said Charles F. Beach, an American lawyer in Paris. "There is no suggestion of Reno in the attitude of the French courts, but French judges are not aware of the advantage that is being taken of them by Americans who are procuring divorces. These divorces are generally of no value in the United States, but Americans obtain them and they may hold until their validity is contested. Any kind of rope of sand will hold until it's pulled."

Liberal Regarding Divorces.

At the ministry of justice the suggestion that Paris is becoming a second Reno for American divorces is not well received. M. Lemeerieux, first assistant to Minister of Justice Barthou, said that France was a liberal country regarding divorces, having been the first continental country to grant them to foreigners, under the law of 1884, and that possibly Paris was being visited for this purpose just as Fiume was such a resort for Italians because of the lack of a divorce law in Italy.

M. Weiss, director of civil affairs at the ministry of justice, said he did not think it logical that France should be looked upon in the United States as a country where divorces could be easily obtained, since there were fewer legal grounds for divorce here than in America.

Generally speaking, France grants divorces to foreigners if their own countries permit divorces. Judges during the last few years have been taking a more lenient view toward applications for divorce by foreigners. Previously the applicants usually were notified that they should apply for divorces in their own country.

FORGES TO FEED DYING WIFE

Youth Freed by Los Angeles Judge, Who Refuses to Consider Him Culpable.

Los Angeles, Cal.—William Strickler, nineteen, whose wife and babe were sick, got a day's work and a check for $4 in payment. He put a zero after the four, cashed the check and spent the $40 on his family.

When arraigned for his crime, Strickler admitted everything to Judge Reeve of the Superior court. The public defender told how, a few days after the forgery Strickler's wife died, and how Strickler, at her grave with his four-month-old baby in his arms, was arrested, handcuffed and taken to jail. Then he asked probation for Strickler.

"Probation?" thundered the court. "Why, the case is dismissed."

Sun Hatches Chicks on Ship Becalmed at Sea

Tacoma, Wash.—A small flock of chickens and ducks was hatched out of the cook's eight cases of Australian eggs while the ship Matzalan lay helpless in the doldrums with the thermometer averaging 102.

The flippers of a giant sea turtle were cooked for food for the baby chicks. When a few ducklings appeared, a tub of sea water was kept on deck for these youngsters to bathe in.

Shiela's Crossed Wires

By LILY WANDEL

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Once outside of the fussy little parlor Shiela leaned her pale cheek against the hall wallpaper. A man doesn't borrow from the woman he loves. It was the deadening of the last little ray of hope.

She rushed upstairs to her bedroom with its great four-poster and neat oval rag rugs her grandmother had made, and thrust her fluttering fingers in the back of the top bureau drawer for the ten-dollar bill Rodney needed. He had lost the job that Mr. Eddington had obtained for him, walked out of the office because he couldn't stand it! And Mr. Eddington had said that a live wire would make good there. She had pinned her hopes on that, tried to tell herself it was only a matter of dollars that prevented Rodney from asking her to marry him. She had told herself with happy tears that he was a live wire, that he would make good!

In the fussy little parlor Rodney slouched in the old davenport, his hands dug in his pockets, a deep scowl on his forehead, his eyes fixed vacantly on the little three-cornered cabinet with its shelves full of images and vases and knick-knacks.

Shiela entered softly, "Don't worry, Rodney. At least this will pay your room rent and the postage on that history of Bucks county. And—perhaps, if I spoke to Mr. Eddington he might see that you were given another chance."

"Hang Mr. Eddington!"

"Oh, Rodney, he has been so kind!"

"I don't like that money air about him—and he's here all the time. Guess he's coming tonight, eh?"

In Shiela's heart a song sang dismally. "If you cared enough, you'd try again, be a live wire and keep Mr. Eddington from marrying me!"

"I know you prize them dearly."

Rodney stared viciously at the foolish, cluttered up three-cornered shelves. "He looks so darn prosperous, too. What's his business, anyway? I bet he's a crook, that's what."

"He's spoken of his offices in the city," answered Shiela quietly. "He's a very well mannered man and very well informed, too, Rodney. Last night he was telling me about cities in Persia and—"

"Aw rats! Who wants to know about that?"

"We can't all be just interested in the history of our own country," murmured Shiela testily. "You know very well the last magazine wrote you that the interest of your history was confined to a very small locality."

Shiela watched him go; the discouraged droop of his shoulders, the shiny back of his serge coat stabbed her young, tender heart. She wished that she did not love him so desperately. And there had been a time when he had been writing the history of Bucks county under the great white lilac bush that she was sure he loved her, too. She could smell the sweet scent of the wet lilacs, hear the robins and see Rodney's enthusiastic smile, but it was nothing but a memory, an empty dream. She could not wait forever, especially when she had sold the last bond, but grandmother did not know that.

Poor, dear old grandmother, with a memory that did tricks, tricks, banked her hopes on Rodney, too. "You are both young," she would counsel gently. "Just wait, there's no hurry and we two have enough to live on; we can wait."

Shiela sighed; her heart was heavy from worry. It would have been so nice if Rodney had been a live wire; life would have been worth living. As it was, there was no alternative; she must accept Mr. Eddington, who had been so kind. He had been calling on her for the past three months; his intentions were obvious. Several times he had commenced to ask the all-important question, but Shiela, panic-stricken, had, by a clever twist in the conversation, prevented him. But he had announced that this evening he was coming on an important mission. It had been a hint to have Rodney out of the way and Shiela realized that she could not forestall the question any longer; besides her own financial affairs cried for help.

Under the soft yellow glow of the shaded lamp, Shiela, in a very faded lavender dress, ruffles primly fluted, sat in the corner of the davenport. Her hands were folded loosely in her lap; she could control them, but her thoughts were less governable. She wondered where Rodney was. He was discouraged, desperately dejected, and he had no one to turn to; he was alone in his miserable furnished room or trotting the streets.

Opposite her on a straight-backed chair Mr. Eddington coughed lightly to draw her wandering attention. He was immaculately dressed, from the brilliantined, scanty locks brushed carefully over his bald head to the fawn-colored spats on his patent leather shoes. His tiny eyes gleamed with unusual intelligence, and though he was stout he gave the impression of being briskly active. He might have easily been taken for a scholar, had not a certain shrewdness in his features marked him as a business man, but certainly not as a merchant or manufacturer.

"Miss Everett, or may I say Shiela?"

With difficulty the girl roused herself from her thoughts. Again the great desire to evade the question, again the panicky feeling as he drew his chair close and leaned forward.

"I do not know if you could have possibly guessed my purpose in coming here this evening, Shiela. A number of times I have tried to tell you, but something in the refined, aristocratic atmosphere of this home—"

"I—I never would leave it—or grandmother," faltered Shiela looking at the door and hoping that by some chance Rodney might come and interrupt them.

"I do not blame you for that, Shiela, though surely one as lovely as you must have thought of marriage."

She grew white and red by turns. "That depends—" she managed to answer, "depends on—"

"On—shall we say—money?" suggested Mr. Eddington discreetly.

She nodded faintly, and he seemed relieved.

"I presumed as much, but I hesitated to say it," he went on very cautiously "Shiela, I have something to ask of you. If I offend you, I will apologize and leave at once. You are aware of how often I have come to this little parlor, I know. Have you noticed how many times my greedy eye has wandered to that little three-cornered cabinet? Shiela, was somebody in your family a traveler, a collector?"

Shiela, puzzled at the unexpected turn in his conversation, answered: "Perhaps; you see grandmother can't remember very well, but she had several brothers who are dead now that traveled, I believe."

Mr. Eddington left his chair and walked briskly to the three-cornered shelves "Here are two little Ming vases, Shiela. Genuine, exquisite little gems! I know, because that is my business, a collector and dealer in the rare old pieces of art. I have been calling on you for nearly three months trying to get up courage to ask you if you will sell the pair to me for $6,000. I know you prize them dearly, but you are young, you may wish money for a trousseau—" he waited for her answer, his whole face nervously expectant.

Shiela was suddenly seized with a desire to burst in uncontrollable laughter, but with an effort she asked him gravely, as though she had dealt in Ming vases all her life, "Are you prepared to pay cash?"

Out in the summer night air she watched Mr. Eddington waddle away, a package under his arm, and then suddenly out of the darkness leaped a tall thin figure.

"Shiela! I was waiting for the fellow to go!" Rodney flung an arm jubilantly around her shoulders. "Here's your ten spot back. I don't need it! I took the old history of Bucks county to the 'Daily Enterprise' and the editor is going to run it as a serial and gave me twenty-five in advance payment. More than that, I am a full-fledged reporter! Shiela," he drew closer, "tell me you don't really care for that old fossil, Eddington, tell me I may hope—"

She gave him her lips in promise and then whispered, "Rodney, come in the library and tell grandmother while I look in the encyclopedia, I want to find out what a Ming vase is!"

U. S. GETS STOLEN CARS

2,120 Automobiles Recovered by Uncle Sam's Theft Squad.

Burns Men Get Conviction of 1,113 Under Dyer Automobile Law—American Automobile Association Helps Federal Officers.

Washington.—Since the passage of the Dyer anti-theft automobile law in October, 1919, the bureau of investigation, Department of Justice, has recovered 2,120 automobiles, worth at a fair second-hand valuation $2,567,206, according to figures compiled for the American Automobile association.

The department has investigated 2,891 cases, which involved 4,385 persons. There were 2,778 persons arrested, of whom 1,588 were indicted and 1,113 convicted. These convicted persons received sentences amounting in the aggregate to 2,356 years 6 months 11 days, and paid fines of $41,140.

The American Automobile association took an active part in supporting the Dyer anti-theft bill, which was prepared by Representative L. C. Dyer of Missouri, who is an active member of the Automobile Club of Missouri, and who was assisted in obtaining facts necessary for the preparation of this measure by the Automobile Club of Missouri and the A. A. A. Credit for the enforcement of the law is due largely to William J. Burns, head of the bureau of investigation.

The outstanding feature of the Dyer law is that it places interstate transportation of stolen motor vehicles under federal law and makes such an action punishable in federal courts. Formerly bands of unscrupulous men had maintained assembling factories at various points and were able to so alter a stolen car as to make it practically unrecognizable to the original owner.

Officials of the A. A. A. are working with federal officials and heads of other organizations to induce motor car manufacturers to mark permanently all automobiles so as to make identification more easy.

JEWS LEAD AS NEW CITIZENS

More of Them Than Any Other Race Naturalized in New York During Last Year.

New York.—About 150,000 new citizens were made in the New York district during the last fiscal year, according to a report just made public by Merton A. Sturges, head of the naturalization bureau. Classified according to races, the Jews led all others in applying for citizenship papers, numbering about one-third of the total.

About 45,000 applications were received, of which 41,000 were granted. This, including wives and minor children, makes approximately 150,000 new American citizens. Aliens are not required to pass a literacy test in applying for their papers, but must speak the English language. Refusals were based mainly on moral grounds.

Defeated Bird, Its Feathers Broken, Picked Up and Sent to Cincinnati Zoo—Distress Signal Brings Hundreds of Crows.

Cincinnati.—A golden eagle sat morosely in the eagle house at the zoo, doing his best to straighten and preen the broken feathers of his once proud coat. No wonder. The huge eagle had been humbled by members of the crow clan.

The eagle arrived from Williamsburg, crated and riding on top of an automobile truck driven by Harry Hall. Mr. Hall said he captured the huge bird several days ago on his farm after the eagle had alighted near a crow's nest containing young birds.

Mr. and Mrs. Crow were standing guard over the brood, and when the eagle dropped out of the sky they let out frantic squawks for help. Instantly, from all points of the horizon, there began to materialize a fleet of angry crows. In a few moments the air was black with crows and blue with crow epithets.

The haughty eagle glared defiance at the threatening cloud of feathered warriors wheeling past and clung to his limb. Bolder and bolder became the crows; closer and closer they swept to the enemy, their wing feathers brushing his face, their beaks snapping defiance and hatred. More than a hundred of the ebony fighters assembled at last, and finally the bolder spirits began delivering blows along with the threats and oaths.

The finish came swiftly. The eagle and the nest which the crows were trying to defend were both knocked from the limb and went tumbling to earth in a pecking, clawing, cursing mass. Even after they had their enemy on the ground the victorious crows gave no mercy, and but for the timely arrival of Mr. Hall and other farmers who were plowing corn in the fields near by the affair might have ended in a tragedy.

The men drove the crows away and were going to pick up the fallen eagle when his ready talons and waiting beak warned them away. Mr. Hall found a solution by procuring a horse blanket and throwing it over the vanquished eagle. Then he carried him to his house and put him in a cage, the crows following as a triumphant escort to see that the thing was done properly and without deceit.

Sol Stephan, manager of the zoo, says the eagle is a fine specimen, measuring nine feet from tip to tip of his dull bronze wings. Except for broken feathers, the big bird is none the worse for his terrible mauling, Mr. Stephan says.

The Love Poacher

By LILY WANDEL

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Lucille had fallen in love with Reggie Devereau. He had asked her to marry him and she had accepted him, but she was not happy at all. Reggie did not measure up to the man of her dreams—the man she had expected to fall in love with—and once again, she felt, had her emotions ruled her rather than her mind. It irritated her to think she had been so weak when her reasoning powers told her plainly that a marriage with Reggie would be a fiasco.

In the first place, Reggie was one of those nice, mild young men who are switched over to anybody's opinion and whose tact and good nature borders on weakness of character. In the second place, Lucille's entire family, and it was a long, rambling one, was waiting for just such a man to lean upon. There was a whole string of old aunts and uncles and second cousins who were looking for a free boarding house in which to end their days; numerous young nephews out of luck, ready to welcome an uncle who would be easy to "touch," a half dozen young, pretty nieces who wished earnestly to study music or something and had no funds. They flattered Reggie, catered to him and filled the parlor the evening he came to call on Lucille. The latter watched keenly for the slightest sign of masterfulness in Reggie, the least indication to assert himself, but she looked in vain.

Then Jim Burns came to town, opened a sporting goods store and took the populace by storm. At a church social Lucille met him and was fascinated. He was just the direct opposite to Reggie; he made it known at once that he "wouldn't stand for any nonsense," everybody had to give in to him, he was not a man to back down from the slightest opinion that he might express. He was a big, fine-looking fellow and his masterfulness was like a magnet. It also attracted Lucille. She never forgot the first night he called.

"I Know You Don't Stand for Any Nonsense."

The parlor was filled as usual, a line of aunts and cousins beaming with welcome and sweetness and a couple of flapper-nieces at the piano twinkling alternately with coyness and fascinating pertness. In five minutes the room was empty except for Lucille and Jim. "I don't stand for any nonsense, you know," he had smiled in his tyrannical way.

After that when he called the parlor was always empty before he arrived. Lucille adored him—he was so masterful in the smallest thing. Things went his way or stood still. It was delightful to see the family put firmly in its place, to be no longer bothered with innumerable "hangers on" wherever one went.

A couple of times when Reggie called Lucille was "out," and when she did receive him he only looked at her with big, reproachful, doggy eyes, but never said a word about Jim's calls. If Lucille pitied Reggie it was a pity that bordered on contempt. Nevertheless, she realized that things could not go on forever this way—she would have to make a decision between the two. It was peculiar that as much as she admired Jim she had not the heart to tell Reggie she was through with him. Her reasoning told her that it was the only proper thing to do, that Jim was the right man for her, yet the memory of many tender moments with Reggie kept her wavering. She was positive that if she had Jim at her side facing Reggie she would be capable of making her choice, would have the strength to tell Reggie to go.

Then again in a gentle mood, her heart swayed toward the even, good-natured Reggie, and she felt that she was not giving him a square deal. She tried to reason it out, look at the future in a cool, practical manner, weigh everything carefully. Invariably the balance was decidedly in the favor of Jim. But she had not the courage to tell poor Reggie.

Then one night after sleepless hours an idea suggested itself. She wondered that she had not thought of that solution sooner and saved herself these days of indecision and worry. She would let Jim settle the whole affair. She would invite the two young men for the same evening, but neither would know that the other was coming, and Jim, who would not stand for any nonsense, would soon settle the affair.

The very next morning Lucille telephoned Jim to come up that evening, and he answered in his usual authoritative way that it had been his intention and he would be there early.

Then she called up Reggie. He was delighted to hear her voice; he thanked her humbly for calling him, but he did not know what to say about coming. "Do you really want me, Lucille?" anxiously.

"Why, of course, Reggie, otherwise I wouldn't have asked you," she spoke very sweetly.

"Lucille! Darling, you make me very happy. I'll be there."

Jim arrived first. Disposing of his hat, he linked his arm through Lucille's and led her straight to a davenport, and, once seated, he kissed her.

"Jim!" said Lucille reproachfully but pleased.

"Look here, honey girl, you and I had better come to an understanding," he said. "There's that little shrimp Reggie Devereau hanging around here and you know I won't stand for any nonsense!"

"When I want a thing, no matter how small, I always get it, and when I've found the girl I love, well—a little thing like Reggie won't stand in my way, that's all—and he might as well know, sooner or later, that I don't stand for any nonsense."

Lucille drew in her breath. Reggie might come any minute, poor Reggie. And hardly had she thought of him when the doorbell rang.

The portieres parted and Reggie came breezily into the room. "Hello"—and stopped a second when he saw Jim settled with Lucille on the davenport. Lucille jumped up and extended a friendly hand, "Hello, Reggie," kindly. "Won't you sit down?"

"Hello, Reggie!" called Jim patronizingly, getting slowly to his feet.

"Good evening," answered Reggie stiffly, ill at ease, a wrinkle lining his usually smooth forehead; "what are you doing here?"

Jim burst into a laugh and Lucille looked at Reggie in genuine surprise. "What am I doing here?" echoed Jim, highly amused, and burst into another big boom of laughter. Lucille giggled nervously; she felt uncomfortable. The line in Reggie's forehead was deepening.

Jim's laughter died out at last and he turned suddenly to the other young man; this time there was no hint of amusement in his voice, but that masterful, compelling note that Lucille adored. "That's none of your business, Reggie Devereau! Now, young fellow, I'll tell you something—I don't stand for any nonsense, so—"

Reggie came forward like a menacing wolf and the bear stepped back. "I know you don't stand for any nonsense, Jim Burns; that's where we two differ. I stand for all the nonsense in the world; I'm the most good-natured fellow you want to meet, but when it comes to the serious things of life, the big things, that's when my good nature stops. I won't stand for a poacher; get that?"

Jim's eyes blazed. "A poacher! Who's a poacher?"

"You! You knew Lucille and I were engaged. Poaching is a serious offense and—"

"Look here"—Jim fairly bellowed—"you have nothing to say about this; it's up to Lucille; she can decide," and he smiled gloatingly.

"Not a word, Lucille," commanded Reggie peremptorily. "Lucille decided a long time ago. If she is wavering now, I'll decide it for her. Now, sir, you get out!"

Jim looked at Lucille; her eyes were fastened on Reggie in breathless amazement, and perhaps he realized that this was not any nonsense, for without a word he stalked out of the house.

USE OF CAMELS IN WARFARE

Animals Have Been Employed From Earliest Times—Napoleon's Famous Dromedary Corps.

In the country where camels live they have been used in battle from very remote times.

In his Egyptian campaign, Napoleon decided in 1798 to create a regiment mounted on dromedaries, to consist of two squadrons of four companies each. The soldiers were to be selected from the infantry, to wear distinctive uniforms, and to be armed with the weapons of the infantry, plus a very long lance. The soldiers were to be mounted on dromedaries of superior speed and endurance. The dromedaries seem to have been easy to train, and no difficulty was incurred in accustoming them to the drum and bugle.

This corps reached a strength of about six hundred men and appears to have been a valuable military force. The usual day's march was about seventy-two miles, and one case is cited of 500 miles in eight days.

The dromedary corps remained in existence about two and a half years. Subsequently similar troops were raised in Algeria, and also in India. The latter force was disbanded in 1858, as it was considered too expensive.

Jimmie's Good Work.

"Mother, is it true that an apple a day keeps the doctor away."

"Yes, Jimmie. Why?"

"'Cause if it is, I kept about ten doctors away this morning."

ALWAYS READY TO GAMBLE

Seemingly Chinaman Will Take a Chance on Any Conceivable Thing That Promises Gain.

Penang is a little island which is part of the scattered colony of the Straits Settlements famous throughout the east for its luxuriant beauty.

Georgetown, its capital, flourishes as a port, and into it every day from the outlying suburbs drive rich Chinese leaning back in their cars and gazing incuriously about them from behind their gold-rimmed spectacles.

When a Chinese in the Straits becomes wealthy, when from a coolie he rises to be a towkay (an influential person), his first desire is to have a residence worthy of his prosperity.

The Chinese is a born gambler. From obscure beginnings many a Straits Chinese has grown immensely rich, and then, again, has sunk into poverty.

It is seldom that a Chinese will "sell out" and invest his money safely. Even when he has made a fortune he continues to gamble.

For him the whole zest of life would be gone if he were merely secure and had no further chance of making more. A "boom" comes and he soars; a "slump" comes and he disappears. What with the collapse of the rubber and tin market, a good many have gone under these last couple of years. But he is a good loser; he always hopes to rise again. The Chinese is blessed with the gambler's optimism.

Telephone Tyranny.

Of all modern weapons of offensive, the telephone is the most unfair, because, in the conflict that follows the call of action (Hello! Is this Suburban 4428?), the party attacked has no adequate weapon of defense. The receiver transmits into the porches of the ear poison gas in the form, let us say, of an invitation to dine and play bridge—a poison more deadly than juice of cursed bebenon, because we have no antidote at hand to pour into the mouthpiece at our end. The only possible retaliation is the sharp, swift stroke of a deadly lie. That such lie is justified, I have—in my saner moments—no doubt; but the moment I am called to the telephone never is a sane moment. I falter. I try to prevaricate. I decide to mix truth and falsehood—and I am lost.

As an aid to the retort courteous and untruthful, Cynthia has pinned on the wall, beside the telephone list, a "telephib list" of alibis and excuses.

A very pretty home wedding was solemnized Tuesday evening, Sept. 12th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Six, 105 Eldon Ave., when their eldest daughter, Cecile, was married to Joseph Howard Cassell. Miss Goldie Six, sister of the bride, acted as maid of honor, and Ralph Cassell, brother of the groom, as best man. The color scheme was green and white. The bride wore white georgette with veil of net and pearl trimming and carried a shower bouquet of bride roses with tulle streamers. The maid of honor wore a pale green organdie and carried pink rose buds. The groom and best man were attired in conventional black. Miss Edith Williams played the wedding march. Rev. Mr. Stimmel performed the ring ceremony. Out-of-town guests were: Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Midgley, Marion, O.; Mrs. Sidney Elliott and Mrs. Nettie Shrum, Hilliards, O. Of the two immediate families about 65 were present. Mr. and Mrs. Cassell will live at 77 Highland Ave.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis A. Clover of Maple Drive, Rome, Ohio, made announcement last week of the marriage, August 28, in Covington, Ky., of their daughter, Iris, to Mr. Earl Buehler, 1054 Jaeger St. The couple will live in Rome. Mr. Buehler is manager of the Steelton branch of Citizens Trust and Savings Bank.

Announcement is made of the marriage Sunday evening of Miss Susie Grooms to Lawrence Scofield. The wedding took place at the home of the bridegroom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Scofield, 101 N. Oakley Ave. Mr. Scofield and his bride will make their home at 101 N. Oakley Ave. for the present.

Mr. and Mrs. James A. Hill, 94 Whitethorne Ave., entertained Thursday evening, Sept. 7, in honor of their son, Raymond's, 16th birthday. The evening was spent in music and games. Raymond received many beautiful gifts. Refreshments were served by the hostess and an enjoyable evening was spent by the following young people:

Dr. G. R. Robbins will preach on these topics Sunday. Morning—"Jesus Christ and Him Crucified."

Evening—"A View of the Glory of God."

Come and see the beautified auditorium and hear Mr. Fulton sing one or two of his inspiring solos. You will be repaid for time and eternity.

Members gave their pastor a great and delightful surprise last Sunday at the first service after his vacation. It was just before going away that the ceiling of the auditorium fell, entirely, ruining the fine decorations, just a few days before completed at a considerable expense and all fully paid for, presenting a disheartening task to make good and beautiful. But during pastor's vacation the church unitedly went to work and completed every detail, and now it is acknowledged the auditorium is one of the finest in our city according to its size. The pastor who was not allowed to know anything about what was doing, expressed himself last Sunday as not only greatly and delightfully surprised, but grateful beyond expression.

The Sunday School class of Helen Stahl met Tuesday afternoon, Sept. 12, at the home of Rexine Dye, 131 N. Burgess Ave. The class was organized and the following officers elected: Thelma Pressler, President; Virginia Pressler, Vice President; Evelyn Leffel, Secretary; Lenora Gilfilen, Asst. Secretary; Naomi Longworth, Treasurer; Rexine Dye, Asst. Treasurer. Committees were also appointed and the girls entered into their first attempt of an organized class with a true zeal. A delightful time was enjoyed by all and they adjourned to meet next month at the home of Evelyn Leffel.

ARMY IN NEED OF LIEUTENANTS

Examination in September Designed to Meet Demands of New Appropriation Bill.

ARE GIVEN CHOICE OF BRANCH

Scarcity of Officers Means Every Man Who Passes Should Get Commission—Regulations Provide Liberal Exemptions.

Washington — Examinations conducted by the War department to fill up the ranks of the second lieutenants among 1,771 officers required by the new army appropriation bill will be started throughout the country early in September. The number of second lieutenants now with the colors is exceptionally small, so that it is expected that every man who qualifies will receive a commission.

Appointments will be tendered successful candidates as soon as practicable after December 31, 1922. These appointments will be made in all branches except the judge advocate general's department. It is the policy of the War department to appoint an officer in the branch of his choice, if possible. For this reason candidates will be asked to express their preference.

Preliminary examinations will be conducted to determine the physical, moral and mental qualifications of applicants in order to avoid inconveniences and unnecessary expense both to the candidate and the government.

Subjects Embraced.

The elementary portion of the final examination embraces the subjects of history, grammar, geography, arithmetic, algebra, geometry, trigonometry and physics. The advanced part of the examination consists of a large number of subjects, including mathematics, advanced mechanics, surveying, languages, literature, electricity, chemistry, law and minor tactics. Examination is required in but three of the subjects of the advanced group, these to be selected by the candidate.

Candidates for appointment in the air service, engineers, signal corps and ordnance department are required to satisfy certain technical requirements, either by examination or by having graduated from technical schools.

The regulations provide liberal exemptions from examination in various subjects according to education, training and experience of the candidate. The granting of exemptions has been placed entirely in the hands of the examining boards and requests for exemption cannot, therefore, be considered by the War department.

Where to Apply.

Application blanks may be secured from the commanding general of the corps area in which the candidate lives. All information concerning the examinations may be obtained from the same source or from the adjutant general of the army.

The location of the various corps area commanders is as follows:

First corps area—Army base, Boston, Mass.

Second corps area—Governors Island, New York.

Third corps area—Standard Oil building, Baltimore, Md.

Fourth corps area—Fort McPherson, Atlanta, Ga.

Fifth corps area—Columbus barracks, Ohio.

Sixth corps area—1819 W. Pershing road, Chicago, Ill.

Seventh corp area—Army building, Omaha, Neb.

Eighth corps area—Fort Sam Houston, San Antonio, Tex.

Ninth corps area—The Presidio of San Francisco, Cal.

AIR HEROES TO REST AT VERDUN

Members of Lafayette Escadrille Who Fell in War to Lie Together.

SIXTY-FOUR NAMES ON LIST

With Approval of Their Relatives Bodies Will Be Gathered and Will Rest Beneath Mausoleum Worthy of Their Valor.

Verdun.—Verdun will be the final resting place of the American heroes who fell while fighting with the Lafayette Escadrille.

Scattered along the line of death from the sand dunes of Nieuport to the swamps of Salonika, their bodies—with the approval of their relatives—will be gathered, and beneath a mausoleum worthy of their valor on a shell-torn hill of the shrine of heroism, they will await the final call, a symbol of the purest sacrifice ever made by man.

Sixty-four names will adorn the monument, but only 62 bodies will be there, that future generations may revere their memory indelibly engraved in the hearts of the living. Nothing was found of the mortal remains of Sergt. Victor Chapman of New York and Lieut. Carter Ovington. They met their fate while soaring high above the clouds, and like Guynemer, they vanished into space, leaving no trace.

A small urn will suffice to contain all that is left of Maj. Raoul Lufbery, cremated alive in his burning plane. Their bodies may have gone to dust, but for each one of these 64 men a place will be set apart as an individual memorial which either now or at any time can be used as a place of interment. In any case, the name of each will appear among the names of his comrades.

A Burial Garden.

This is the program of the Lafayette Escadrille Memorial association. Born of the initiative of Lieut. E. G. Hamilton, it has undertaken to create and maintain in France a burial garden for the heroes of the Lafayette Flying corps who enlisted under the flag of France and gave their lives for the cause they defended.

President Millerand, Premier Poincare and Minister of War Maginot have accepted the patronage of the association, whose president is Marshal Foch and its vice president Ambassador Herrick.

The plan for the memorial garden designed by Alexandre Marcel, chief architect of the French government, has been mailed to every relative of the dead aviators. The garden will occupy a site about two miles from Verdun, the ground having been donated by the French government for this purpose. In the letter which accompanies the plan the committee says:

"We feel that these men who were actuated by the same noble motives, who together underwent the arduous life of training and faced the dangers of the front; who in many instances had been close comrades in life, should in death lie together in this memorial garden, which for all time shall be a testimonial to their devotion to an ideal which was stronger than their love of life. It is for their relatives themselves to decide whether or no the body shall be moved to the place reserved for it. The committee pledges itself that the removals will be done with the utmost care and reverence."

I am now delivering ice on the Hilltop. If you want a reliable ice man, call Wolfe, Hilltop 4558.

The Meeting Tides

By A. W. PEACH

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Mary saw the ambulance sweep up the tree-lined avenue to the door where the orderlies waited. Looking down from her room in the tall nurses' building, she watched the figure on the stretcher, with some faint remembrance of having seen before the face of the quiet man who was being tenderly carried in. Her telephone rang softly; the message was brief: "Emergency, Reynolds—Doctor Louis has the operation."

She went downstairs, thinking as she went that it was getting to be more and more her tall surgeon lover who was called upon for the critical operations in the head cases. "If I only could love him as he loves me," she thought, wondering for the hundredth time why she could not.

As she stepped into the room where the still form lay, a nurse looked up. "Quick, Mary, it's a serious concussion." She started to aid the other nurse when she glanced at the white face. The hard floor seemed to sink beneath her and something within her cried out with anguish. She was looking into the face of her old lover, Alan Lane; and in that look's space the past came before her—her hot accusations, his cold denials, refusal to explain—then the parting. He had not loved her as she loved him—with all the passion of her twenty years.

"Mary, what's come over you?" the sharp query aroused her.

She bent to her task. As she removed the vest, from the inside pocket a leather case fell at her feet. She picked it up, and as she did so the simple case opened, and there she saw—herself, dark-haired, dark-eyed, happy.

The meaning of it—there could be but one meaning; he loved her; had been loving her for eight years that had come and gone, and now fate had thrust him before her, dying. She shook with the agony of the situation, and all the vines she had tried to grow to hide her love for him were stripped aside.

"Mary, what has come over you?" her companion demanded. "They are waiting for him."

She shuddered at the thought of the operation room. She could not possibly stay there and hand to Louis the instruments and watch them.

"Oh, I can't! I can't!" she cried, drawing away, her face on the calm face below hers—a strong face, lined with care.

She rushed out. Doctor Louis was passing. He looked at her with brown eyes that always seemed to be hungry when they were turned to her. She caught his arm.

"Arnold, you must save him—you must—you—" Then she remembered and shrank away. His eyes were suddenly keen and cold.

"You mean—is he the one I have seen you thinking of when I was thinking of you?"

She nodded. She heard his quick breath, and when she looked up was frightened by the stark coldness in his eyes. That very coldness sobered her sharply. Louis loved her with all the fire of his nature; would he in a mad moment dare to fail to do something that ought to be done, just to remove forever from her reach this old love that had come, broken, to her feet? It seemed hardly possible, yet—his eyes were hard.

"You will help, of course?" he asked coldly.

She started to shake her head; then the wild determination came to be there—just to be sure. She nodded.

In the little anteroom to the operation room she made her preparations, then went in to her duties. The still figure was wheeled quickly in; and the old, old struggle began—the battle of the living to keep the living.

The white-tiled, hushed room became for her a torture chamber in some wide corridor of hell. Her splendid training served her; she was able to work almost automatically. Her great fear passed; Louis was working as she had never seen him, with marvelous skill and speed; and suddenly it dawned upon her that he was making his great sacrifice also as he labored with all the skill he possessed to save the life beneath his knives for her. The coldness that had been in his eyes was the coldness of men who summon their will to a great task and a still greater decision.

The bandages at last were woven about the crushed head and the quiet figure was wheeled out. Louis turned to her, his eyes dark with weariness and strain. "Mary, I am almost sorry, but I think he will live. He must have ceaseless care. I will have you assigned to his case."

The battleground was transferred to room 24 in corridor 10, and there a girl kept the night vigils, the time when souls are most likely to go out, and a surgeon who loved her spent his fine skill in saving for her the man she now knew she loved in spite of the past.

There were hours of doubt and moments of intense question, when only the strong heart seemed to be faintly awake. Again and again she called Louis from his sleep; and again and again his ministrations rallied the quieting heart. At the end of one dark hour she turned to Dr. Louis. "Arnold, am I selfish?" she asked.

"Not if you love him as I love you," was his brief answer.

She caught his hand and drew it to her cheek impulsively. No other answer she had.

Then came the awakening. She had come into the room for her night watch and she spoke with the day nurse. Before she could answer there was a stirring in the bed, and a pain-wrenched voice asked over and over, "That voice? That voice? That voice?"

Mary motioned the nurse out, then knelt by the bedside. She knew that she must reach in through the faint bit of consciousness that the sound of her voice had aroused. She caught the seeking fingers and laid her cheek against the bandaged head and spoke softly: "It is I, Mary, who loves you. Sleep. I will be here when you awake."

She looked at the bandaged eyes. She knew that beneath their glassy stare if she could have seen them would have been a faint light of consciousness. Into that consciousness her words reached. There was a slow relaxation of the body, a change in the heavy breathing—he slept. She drew her head away, then bent and very lightly kissed his hot lips. The lost, unhappy years were forgotten. She knew the tide of sleep would bring him back—all hers.

PRIZE MARK TWAIN'S LETTER

Humorist's Order for Barrel of Siloam Water Is Treasured in Small Town of Missouri.

No documentary biography of Mark Twain will have much of a sale in Excelsior Springs, Mo., which does not include a letter written by him in the early '80s ordering a barrel of Siloam water. Excelsior Springs hasn't any proof that Twain ever drank the water, but, just as the folks of the little town of Florida, Mo., will point out to the stranger the place where Samuel L. Clemens was born, and the people of Hannibal will lead him past the house in which the humorist spent his boyhood, so will the old timers of Excelsior Springs take him into the offices of the water company and, with surpassing pride, spread out before him a time-yellowed page which bears the following message:

"Messrs. Fish and Henry—Gents: I have seen the advertisement of your springs. You say the water cures Bright's disease, diabetes, rheumatism, gout, liver complaint, bronchitis and itch. I think that is what the matter with me is. Please send me a barrel of your water expressed C. O. D., and if I like it I will take all you've got.

"Yours truly, MARK TWAIN."

"P. S.—Please give me the dose for an adult."—Kansas City Star.

It Was Her Idea Anyway.

The children were suffering their periodical written examination and all the morning their pens spluttered and scratched.

"Bring me your papers when you have finished," said the teacher.

Little Mary came and handed in her work, with a bright smile.

And the teacher smiled, too, when she read:

"An image is an idle maid with hands!"

Seeing in the Dark.

No animal can really see in the dark. Cats and other nocturnal animals have eyes whose pupils distend so widely that they can see in a light too dim to be detected by human beings. If it is absolutely dark they are as blind as we are. Many animals have long, sensitive whiskers which act as guides when they move. If one of these bristles touches anything, the animal feels it at once, and moves to one side in order to avoid the obstruction.

Paid $20 to Hear Dog Bark Over the Telephone

An American business man left his table in Muldoon's restaurant, in Havana, Cuba, and walked to the telephone.

"Give me Murray Hill, New York City, and tell the party who answers that I wish to speak to my bulldog," he said.

After a brief interval guests at a nearby table heard a faint "woof, woof," coming from the receiver. The charge was $20.

"Doggone," growled the man, "that's $10 a woof."

COLUMBUS' BONES NEED REAL TOMB

Plan for Great Monument Over Discoverer's Neglected Remains Is Revived.

IS PAN-AMERICAN PROJECT

Coffin at Santo Domigo is Now Opened So Visitors May Handle Relics—Plan Beacon Light for Navigators.

Washington.—Reorganization of a movement among Pan-American nations to provide a suitable memorial and final resting place for Christopher Columbus, the man who gave "the New World to the Old," has been reported to the War department by William E. Pilliam, receiver-general of Dominican customs. Mr. Pilliam's report says the project was relaunched recently and is commended to the sympathetic consideration of Pan-Americans everywhere.

Open Coffin for Visitors.

The remains of Columbus were brought to Santo Domingo from Spain in 1540, the report says, adding that it has been the practice lately to open the casket and permit high dignitaries or distinguished visitors to the island republic to handle personally some of the bone fragments.

"This happened upon the occasion of a visit by Secretary of War Stimson and party in 1911, also the year following, when Secretary Knox and numerous parties made their ceremonial trip around the Caribbean Circle," the report says. The writer was present upon both occasions and admits, but not without some self-reproach, that he, too, handled some of the bone fragments.

"It was that fact," the report continues, "which first suggested the idea that it should be the concern of Pan-Americans, the peoples of the twenty-one republics occupying the territory of North and South America, with the co-operation of Canada, to provide a suitable memorial and final resting place for Columbus in the 'Cradle of America,' as Santo Domingo is called.

Popular Move.

"A popular move it should be, and with its palpably popular appeal its failure would constitute a reflection upon Pan-America. Poor, unfortunate Santo Domingo cannot do it alone, though thirty years ago, at the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America, a Junta Nacional was duly constituted by Dominican government decree to erect a monument in the cathedral. That much was accomplished, but at the time it was understood the arrangement was temporary. While the monument at the cathedral is ornate, it is novise commensurate with the greatness of the man, nor does it constitute a fitting or adequate homage for such a world character."

The report concludes with a statement that the project abandoned on account of the World war contemplates the erection of a massive tomb, its interior modeled after that at Les Invalides, Paris, with its exterior patterned after the lines of Grant's tomb, in New York. Superimposed on the tomb itself would be a beacon tower, about 300 feet in height, in the top of which would be a great light as an aid to navigation.

U. S. LIBRARY MAKES FRIENDS

Helps With Italo-American Association to Create Better Understanding Between Peoples.

Rome.—Moved by the belief that Italy and the United States should know each other better, resident Americans founded here since the war the Library for American Studies and the Italo-American association. Both organizations are prospering.

The library, located in the Palazzo Salviati, contains between 10,000 and 15,000 volumes on the United States, and a large number of American magazines and newspapers always is on hand. Both Italian and American readers frequent the library in increasing numbers.

A summer course for Americans has been opposed at the Rome university. The meetings are held in the Palazzo Salviati by ex-Ambassador Tittoni, now minister of public instruction, and special lectures will be given during the course by Professors Boni, Venturi, Gentile and other well-known men.

BITES BEAR'S NOSE; ESCAPES

Hunter and Bruin Stage Desperate Battle in Woods in Northern Finland.

London.—In a wood in northern Finland there was a recent thrilling struggle between a hunter and a great bear, reports the Helsingfors correspondent of the Daily News.

The latter had been wounded by a shot, but as the man approached the bear attacked him and a hard struggle began, which lasted for more than an hour.

The man pushed his hand into the animal's mouth and gripped its tongue, at the same time beating its head with an ax. But it was only when he set his teeth into the beast's nostrils so that the blood was spurting forth that the bear loosened its grip and the man was rescued, his hand, however, being seriously injured.

BISO TO BE DEPORTED

Big Buffalo Will Be Sent to Montevideo, Uruguay.

Favorite of Visitors to Wichita National Forest Doomed to Exile Because Southern Neighbor Wants Specimen.

Washington.—Biso is unhappy!

He is to be deported, thrust from the land of his birth, torn from his wives and children and doomed to live in exile for the rest of his days.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace has decreed that he must go; the forest service has arranged his transport and Biso is inconsolable.

Biso is the big buffalo bull that for 15 years has been the admiration of visitors to the Wichita national forest and game refuge in Oklahoma. The city of Montevideo, Uruguay, has asked that its zoological garden be supplied with an American bison and the forest service men who have charge of the buffalo on the Wichita say that Biso will be an excellent representative of this typical North American species whose once mighty herds roamed the great plains from Mexico to northern Canada.

In 1907 15 bison were "planted" in the Wichita national forest and have since increased to over 150 head. This herd promises to maintain the type and stamina of the original bison, since the animals are kept at all times under natural conditions. They subsist entirely on wild grasses and live within so large an inclosure that they are under practically no restraint.

So Biso has been well content and is reluctant to leave. Yet many of the younger buffalo bulls are casting envious glances at the old fellow. It would be very pleasant, they think, to dose idly beneath a palm tree and be served with fresh cut grasses or have their wrinkled noses patted by some dark-haired senorita.

But Biso has his doubts.

ANTIPODES IDLE SEEK COLONY

Plan Outlined to Have Australian Government Make Land Grant Plus Cash.

Sydney.—Establishment of an unemployed workers' colony in northern Queensland, suggested by the unemployed workers' committee, is to be placed before the premier, following its approval by a mass meeting of the unemployed.

The objects of the project are to relieve distress and to demonstrate "that the working class is capable of managing and controlling industry," according to an announcement. It is suggested the colony obtain from the government free grants of land, and a cash subsidy equal to the amount raised by the colony, co-operate in clearing, preparing and cultivating land, produce foodstuffs and maintain suitable quarters, libraries and recreation rooms. Compulsory labor will be the first rule of the colony and a committee to be chosen will detail a member to any occupation. The initial funds are to be raised by making a voluntary levy of one shilling week-

Pink Envious of Purple, and Vice Versa, With Startling Result on Busy Thoroughfare.

New York.—A pink shirt and a purple one changed backs in Mattison avenue, the principal thoroughfare of Asbury Park, N. J., while scores of persons watched.

Wearing a purple shirt, Milan Ross, real estate dealer, met his friend, Irving Newman, an official of the Asbury Park and Ocean Grove bank, who was attired in the pink. Each admired the other's shirt. Ross suggested the change and Newman agreed.

Both started to remove their shirts and a crowd became interested. Newman got his off, but fled to a telephone booth when the crowd came closer. Ross, undismayed, continued to change. He hung his own on an ice cream sign while he put on Ross'.

Tragic Death of Mr. W. O. Beede

The news of the tragic death last week of our fellow-townsman, Mr. William O. Beede, aged 34 years, of 165 North Hague Ave., fell like a pall upon our community. Mr. Beede, who has been a resident of the Hilltop for many years, had gained a host of friends and was liked by all who knew him. He was an active member of the Hilltop Chamber of Commerce and a booster for the welfare of the Hilltop.

Mr. Beede was engaged in redecorating the steeple of the Good Hope Lutheran Church at Bucyrus when the accident occurred. The following account of the accident is taken from the Bucyrus Evening Telegraph:

"William O. Beede, general painting contractor and rigger, fell 160 feet from the spire of Good Hope Lutheran Church, Thursday morning, and was almost instantly killed, the accident occurring at 7:30, a few minutes after he had ascended to bring down the tackle used in painting the spire. The tackle fell with him and as no evidence of frayed rope or other defect could be discovered it is presumed that a rope end slipped free causing the swing to drop instantly. He fell from the base of the cross on the south at the very top of the steeple.

"Fellow workmen who saw him fall and who heard the impact as the body struck the slate roof of the church over a hundred feet below and rebounded to the ground, ran to him at once and found him lying at the curb. He expired in a few seconds without regaining consciousness and the body was removed to the Wise undertaking establishment, where it was found that the skull was fractured, the right arm broken and other injuries sustained internally, any one of which was enough to cause immediate death.

"The work here was almost completed and the tackle was being removed in preparation for departure for Detroit when the fatal accident occurred.

"Mrs. Harry J. Carpenter, at 215 West Charles St., who was watching Beede at work at the moment of falling, and was looking directly at him when he dropped, says he had raised and lowered himself several times after mounting to the tower, descending to the small windows 30 feet below, and ascending again in his work of loosening the tackle, which he was removing as the work on the steeple was finished. He was right at the top of the steeple, at the base of the cross, seated in the chairlike scaffold and working with both hands free, when suddenly the outfit let go and man and tackle dropped together. Mrs. Carpenter could not believe but that Beede, working with his hands behind him at times, had loosened the wrong rope. The condition of his hands showed that he had made a desperate effort to stop his progress, the ends of the fingers of both hands being worn nearly through and the palm of one hand lacerated where he had evidently grasped desperately at the ropes.

"The man was seated on the swinging board used in such work and the entire apparatus let go all at once, Beede falling backward and clear of the steeple in a straight drop to the roof of the church where a patch of ruined slate shows the point of impact. Mr. Beede has been engaged in the hazardous occupation of a steeple jack for 15 years and specialized in the painting of signs, stacks, tanks, steeples, flag poles, structural steel and all swinging stage work. Although never before in an accident himself, two of his men were killed at the Jeffrey plant in Columbus several years ago while painting the interior structure of the plant, and a brother-in-law also lost his life in the same kind of work."

Mr. Beede leaves a widow, Mrs. Cecil Beede, three small children, his parents, one brother and two sisters. The funeral services were held last Saturday, Rev. Mr. McFarlane, of Hill Crest Baptist Church officiating. Burial took place in Green Lawn Cemetery, Mr. C. J. Kohn having charge.

When Some of Us Were Boys

One often comes across a boy or girl of our community who, in his or her own mind, gets the idea that starting to work at small pay and long hours is a handicap to success in life; and therefore shuns such places, seeking only for something that looks more profitable at the start. So with this thought in view, (and that such boy or girl may see that instead of being a hindrance, to "rough it" at the beginning, it is by far a greater help in after life). We are beginning a series of articles in the Record telling of early experiences, incidents, etc., of some of our own Hilltop business and professional men. This, together with other historical and geographical facts in connection will, we believe, be interesting reading.

MR. A. H. BUDD, the pioneer barber of the Hilltop, worked on his father's farm near Galena, Ohio, until he was 25 years old, working hard every day from early morning until night, receiving scarcely any money, getting his board and clothes until 21, then worked five years for a horse and buggy and a couple of hundred dollars. Thinking he could do better, he left there at 25, went to work at the State Hospital as an attendant, where he worked until he took up his present business of barbering.

MR. JOHN FIPPIN, of the firm of Ong & Fippin, started working in a brickyard at the age of 17 years, wheeling brick from the machine, for whwich he was paid $1.25 a day. Wheeling 7,000 brick was a day's work. The brickyard stood on the south side of the National Road (now West Broad Street), between what is now Whitethorne and Midland Aves. He worked there and at another brick yard north of here for three years, at the above wages. Then he worked in a saw mill, firing, for 13 months, at $1.50 a day, until he left there and went on a farm.

He went to school in a little brick school house that stood where S. W. Six's grocery now stands, at Highland and Broad. At that time (in 1861) there were only four houses on the south side of Broad Street between where the present Big Four tracks now cross Broad St., and Mt. Carmel Hospital, one of them being a log house that stood just east of that place. Then a big ampitheatre and race course stood where Camp Chase is, opposite the present residence of Mr. Chas. Haldy, about a quarter of a mile west of Hague Ave. Between what is now Harris and Hague Aves. stood a frame house. Where the Thomas residence (Carl Weber's) is, near Ogden Ave., there stood an old time frame and a saw mill, with a pile of saw dust as big as the Thomas house. Then between what is now South Oakley and Wheatland Aves. another log house stood. There was no other building on the south side of the road until one reached Mt. Carmel Hospital.

About 100 yards south of the present site of Six's grocery and extending all the way to Camp Chase the timber had been cut off, but a thick growth of underbrush still remained all the way out west.

On the north side of the National Road (Broad St.) a broom corn farm extended from Davis Ave. to the foot of the hill. Where the present entrance of the State Hospital is, stood a big double house built of logs, where the present main building fronts was the Sullivant mansion (the home of the owner of this part of the county at that time). A toll gate and business where the Hilltop fire department now stands. A little log cabin stood where Dr. Warner now lives at North Harris and Broad. Then came the old Four-Mile House, which was torn down a few years ago. The larger part of the north side of the National Road was set with heavy timber.

In 1863 a sham battle was given by Northern soldiers stationed at Camp Chase on the ground where Van Doboe-Haver addition is. One man was accidentally killed.

Stage coaches and a few buses were the only means of transportation between Camp Chase and Columbus.

The Concealed Accounts

By H. IRVING KING

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Guardian, is there any way I can get rid of my money?" The speaker was Charlotte Lander, twenty-two years old, considered very good-looking by everybody and the most beautiful creature on earth by John Fenton. The place was a lawyer's office and the person addressed was Lawyer Norton, City, New York.

Lawyer Norton looked at his questioner in blank astonishment. He was a heavy, pursey man, with a bald head and side whiskers. His face was stern, but in it there shone a pair of kindly eyes.

"What in the world put such an idea as that into your head?" cried he.

"No, but can I? I mean it."

"Why, I should say, offhand, that there were many ways in which you could get rid of your money—if I would let you. You might throw it off the Brooklyn bridge, or the Battery, if you preferred that place; or you might hand it over to the United Charities."

"The very thing!"

"What?"

"The United Charities."

"Now, look here, Charlotte," said Mr. Norton sharply, "will you stop this sort of talk and tell me just what it is that you are driving at?"

Charlotte blushed, started to cry and thought better of it; looked sheepish, began to play with a pencil on the table before her and, at Norton's abrupt "Come, out with it," said in a wheedling tone:

"Well, guardie, dear, if I don't get rid of my money I can't be married. There! Now you will let me, won't you?"

"My dear Charlotte," replied Norton, "this is positively childish; besides being incomprehensible. Since when, pray, was a young woman's fortune an obstacle to her getting a husband? Explain yourself—if you can."

And Charlotte, with a good deal of roundabout verbiage and hesitation and digression, did explain. She was in love with John Fenton and he was in love with her, but John was poor and had scruples about marrying a rich girl. Therefore Charlotte proposed to divest herself of her wealth.

"It's only my hateful money that stands between us and—happiness," she explained. "And I thought it would be so easy to fix that."

"Hum!" said the lawyer. "Hum! And what is this remarkable young man's occupation and address?" Charlotte gave the required address and stated that John was a mining engineer.

"Now look here, Charlotte," said Norton, "I think you are both as mad as March hares. But having dandled you on my knee as a baby, and been your guardian ever since the death of your parents, I will talk with the young idiot of the second part and see what can be done." Charlotte gave the old lawyer a resounding kiss on his bald forehead and tripped away full of hope. Her guardian never had denied her anything, and she was constantly resorting to him in her perplexities. Her Aunt Matilda, with whom she lived in an old brownstone house in a side street below Madison square, was a dear old soul, but perfectly spineless—a nebulous old maid whom Charlotte simply bewildered. Lawyer Norton wrote a note to John Fenton requesting him to call at his office at a certain hour next day. John knew that Norton was Charlotte's guardian and foresaw what the interview would be about.

He who Fenton appeared at the appointed time at Lawyer Norton's office he was at a thing but at his ease. His scruples with regard to Charlotte's wealth rather pleased the old lawyer, who had been somewhat anxious lest some beguiling wooer who had one eye on the fortune and the other on the girl, should capture his ward's fancy.

"Well, young man," said Norton, "my ward, Miss Lander, informs me that you won't marry her because she is rich."

"Oh, no, not that, exactly, sir," stammered John. "But we both thought that if our fortunes were more equal we could be married now and not have to wait until I had accumulated sufficient money to enable me to—in short, sir, that we ought to be more nearly equal as to means, and she very unselfishly promised to arrange matters. You must admit yourself, sir, that it doesn't look just right for a poor man to marry a rich girl—now, does it?"

"What's your present salary?"

"Three thousand a year."

"Humph! When I was married I was only getting one thousand."

"But perhaps, sir, you did not marry an heiress."

"No, I did not. My poor Bessie and I rose in the world together."

"There, sir, that's just what Charlotte and I want to do!" exclaimed John. "You see, I am going down to examine some mines in Mexico and have been promised a share in them. If they turn out all right it will make a rich man of me. I am to get an increase of salary, too. Charlotte and I thought we would like to be married before I go South—if the money part can be arranged—and you have no objections to me."

"I am glad you have come to that at last," replied Norton. "It is rather the custom, you know, before marrying a young lady to speak to her parent or guardian. How much salary do you expect while in Mexico?"

"Six thousand, sir; just double what I am getting now."

"Hum! Well, young man, I am sorry, but I don't see my way clear to let my ward divest herself of her fortune just to gratify a whim. Good-day."

John went out in despair; he flew to Charlotte and they were both in despair.

"We must wait, that's all," they said. But at the end of a week John came to Charlotte filled with a desperate resolve.

"Charlotte," said he, "never mind if you are rich. Hang the money! Let's get married right off."

"Ho! Mr. Fortune Hunter!" cried Charlotte, gayly, "so that is your game, is it? Well, just look here."

And she showed him a letter from her guardian which read:

"Dear Charlotte—I have to inform you that the income from your estate for which I shall account to you until further notice will be $6,000 a year instead of $25,000 as heretofore. Your money is invested in securities, and you know that stocks sometimes lose their value. P. I. & C. has gone down to nothing—is practically valueless." Then they danced a merry saraband—with John's increase of salary their incomes would be equal. They were married within the week. Three years passed. John Fenton was a rich man now and able to spend most of his time with Charlotte in New York. Lawyer Norton summoned Mr. and Mrs. Fenton to his office. "I am getting old," he said. "It is time I gave an account of my stewardship. Here, Charlotte, are the accounts—your original fortune and the $9,000 a year I have been holding back out of your income. I reckon John is rich enough now to match you."

"But, guardian, you said—"

"I said your money was in securities, and that securities sometimes lost their earning power. So they do. I didn't say that yours had. I said that P. I. & C. was down to nothing. So it was. I didn't say your money was in it. Now did I? There, there. Name the next boy after me and settle on him the money I have been holding out on you. I'll add enough more so that if he wants to marry an heiress her guardian won't be forced into concealing her accounts."

TELEGRAPH BLANK WILL O. K.

Probate Court of England Holds Document Written in Shorthand Characters Valid.

London.—A will written in shorthand on a telegraph blank has been admitted to probate in solemn form, its validity upheld by the Probate court of England. It was written by Charles S. Orrin, a commercial traveler, who adopted phonetic writing as the quickest means of expressing his wishes regarding the disposition of his large estate when informed by the doctors that he had only a few hours to live.

The stenographic characters were so perfectly executed that they were readily translated by the official shorthand reporter of the court.

INDIAN GIRL IS RICH

Oil Sends Her From Poverty Wealth in Two Months.

But $2,000-a-Day Income Has Not Turned Her Head—Ambition Is to Be Farmerette and Drive a Tractor.

Muskogee, Okla.—"Here's one Indian girl who is not going to be singed by the bright lights of the Great White Way," said Exie Tiger, nineteen-year-old Creek, when told that her allotment in Creek county had produced its fourth gusher and lifted her income from royalties to near $2,000 a day.

Exie's production now averages about 4,000 barrels of crude daily. How much Exie has become worth since the first producer was brought in on her land two months ago she herself does not know. Only the officials of the Indian agency, where her money is handled, know, and they are not telling it for publication.

Exie received the news of her fourth gusher just as the carpenters were driving in the last nails of her modest new five-room bungalow that Uncle Sam decided to build for her down on Fame, in McIntosh county, when oil royalties began to pour in to Exie's credit. The house harmonizes with Exie's simplicity.

"In the fall I am going to study music and will possibly go to a finishing school," said Exie. "I am also going to send my brother to some big college. I want him to be somebody. I am going to continue to make Fame my home, no matter how many millions of dollars I make out of oil. I have lived here since childhood and riches will never tempt me to move. I am always going to stay a country girl.

"No, I don't care to travel; at least not now. Some time later on I probably will take a trip, but I assure you that it's not going to be a money-spending orgy.

"What do I want to be? I want to be a farmerette, as you city folks say. I want about five hundred or a thousand acres, stocked with sleek, pure-bred cattle, and waving fields of corn and grain. Then I want a flock of puffing tractors, with this little girl behind the biggest one of them all. That's the life for me."

Seven more wells are drilling and oil men say the allotment should be good for about forty wells. Indian agency officials, even in these days of low-priced crude, forecast an income of $5,000 a day for Exie within the very near future.

And Exie is about as remarkable as her luck. Although she was a pauper two months ago, her good fortune has made little change in her. She is utterly devoid of extravagance.

Tales Told by Tourists at Glenwood Camp

It looked like someone was moving when a Ford drove into the grounds about dark one night, with no tire on one rear wheel, bearing this sign, "From Coast to Coast." It was that of C. J. Green and wife of Salt Lake City, Utah, who left there in July, 1921, and have since been in all the Western states and nearly every state in the Union and as far north as Alberta, Canada. Also visiting the "Jackson Hole" country, a place in the mountains of northern Montana, where, in the early days of the West, bandits used as a hiding place, by utilizing holes in the mountains large enough to drive in and camp, yet being secluded enough to remain undiscovered for a long time. They also just missed a cloudburst in North Dakota, where roads were flooded—at one place for about 200 yards—but drove through it, the water reaching to above the hubs of the machine. Coming out of the mountains in Wyoming one night their lights went out and they were many miles from a supply house, so made their beds and went to sleep on the ground. About 1 o'clock Mrs. Green was awakened by the cold nose of something coming against her face and feeling its breath. On jumping up and giving the alarm they found a bunch of timber wolves were "parking" around them. But with the aid of their guns and German police dog they drove them away. Had a collision near Milwaukee. Report no tire trouble until about 300 miles northwest of here where trouble began and they had eleven tube blowouts since that.

Mr. G. A. Beirar, wife and daughter and brother-in-law, E. A. Wilson, left their home in Los Angeles, Calif., in a Ford touring car June 29th last, went to Portland and Seattle, 60 miles of Yellowstone trail from Santa Rosa, Calif., over bad mountain roads. Could only travel five miles an hour for two days. Rode over eight mountain ranges, struck gumbo road (white clay) in North Dakota, in ditch three hours. Saw baby killed when house on wheels was upset by hitting a ditch in Bad Lands of North Dakota. Also five killed on a single road around a mountain by running too close to edge, and whole machine load went over a cliff 80 feet high. Passed through 50 miles of forest fires, within half mile of blazing timber, where 2,000 men were fighting the fires. They report fine camp at Portland, Oregon, which had at the time they were there 1,000 machines. Has all modern facilities (including radio station) for 50 cents a day. Big trees at Eureka, Calif., large enough when hollowed out for a team of horses and wagon to drive in. Have been to New York, Niagara Falls, Washington and the East. Are on way back. Say if they've missed any mountains on their trip are coming back and get them. Have traveled 8,000 miles on trip.

Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Dye, of Seattle, Wash., left there the first of last December, in a Chalmers machine, going through Portland, Ore., then down the coast over the Siskiyou Mountains, a very rough road, with snow in the mountain roads some places from seven to nine feet deep, requiring men to be on the job a great deal of the time with snow plows clearing the road. They came east over the old Santa Fe trail. Mr. Dye reports having been bitten by a tarantula in New Mexico. It made him quite sick at first and the spot on his leg is still sore, but not bothering him to any great extent. They are going to New York, then back over the Old Mexican Trail, through El Paso, Texas, and Southern California. Have traveled 27,000 miles.

Mr. James Hynes and wife and Mr. Paul Hynes and Mrs. Dodson, of Columbia County, Pa., stopped here on their way home from a trip to Rock Island, Ill., and Omaha, Neb. They traveled in an '85 Overland. Said they went 1,150 miles in 41 hours and 20 minutes. Never had a puncture or a blow-out. Still have Pennsylvania air in their tubes—a total mileage since starting and back of 1,850 miles. Say this is second best camp they have struck, that of Dayton being the best.

There have been about 1,800 tourists camped here at Glenwood Park this season to date.

Don't forget the Girl Scout Lawn Fete, September 23rd.

HONOR WAR DEAD OF ALL NATIONS

Sculptor Outlines Most Pretentious Tribute of Modern Times to Soldiers of World War.

MUSEUM AND TEMPLE IN ONE

In Conception It Can Be Compared Only to the Wonderful Basilica of Imperial Rome—Is Leading Sculptor.

Rome.—An exhibition of Antonio Sciortino's "Monument of the Nations" will be opened in Rome in the fall, and the model, as well as thousands of sketches and plans, is to be on view in his studio at the British academy. This monument is one of the most pretentious ever planned in modern times. In conception it can be compared only to the wonderful basilica of Imperial Rome.

It was in 1917 that Professor Sciortino, pondering over the war in which millions of soldiers were killed, planned a monument which would be a fitting one for the heroic dead, as well as a museum and temple combined. His original idea was that it should be an international monument, one which could be erected on some historic spot, on a battlefield. He suggested to many friends that, while the bones scattered over many battlefields could be interred in the walls of the crypt, one central tomb should be a memorial for all, whether privates or officers. On the sketches which he made in 1917 he wrote: "Plans for a monument to an unknown soldier and sailor." It was his idea that millions should consider that tomb the resting place of their own lost ones.

For Noted Dead.

The monument is a building which will consist of three galleries, a library and a museum. In the first gallery there will be 300 instrumental percussions, which will be heard for miles around; in the second, 300 bells, which will peal on commemorative days, while in the central hall there will be an organ, to be played on solemn occasions. In whatever country it is erected it would be not only a monument to the memory of the fallen soldiers, but also a kind of Westminster Abbey, where men of note would be buried.

Antonio Sciortino, who occupies the post of director of arts at the British academy in Rome, is a man of middle age and is considered by many critics to be the leading British sculptor of today. He studies not in Rome but also in Paris. He is still a young man (he is forty-four years old) he has accomplished much. He works quickly, modeling with a rapidity which is contrary to the custom of many modern sculptors. His quickest bit of work was a mask made when he was in Paris ten or twelve years ago while visiting a friend's studio. It happened to be his last day in Paris and he had called in to say good-by to a fellow sculptor. He had only twenty minutes to spare. Seated in a corner, in an easy chair, was Leo Textonius, the American pianist, who had often asked Sciortino to make a model of his head. Sciortino took up a piece of clay and in little more than fifteen minutes had modeled a mask of the pianist.

This mask was hanging in the American artist's studio when Rodin paid a visit there. Rodin was enthusiastic at the originality of the work.

Wins Against 300.

The winning of the competition in 1914, offered by the Duma committee of Kieff, was not only a personal, but an international success, as 300 sculptors of all nations competed for five years. Three times Sciortino competed and won money prizes. When in 1914 he won again it was decided to give him the order for the statue. The decision of the committee caused great indignation throughout Russia.

The committee then decided to hold a referendum. All the prominent men and women of Russia were asked to view the model and decide whether the Russian models were equal to that of the British sculptor. They unanimously held that the statue chosen was best of all the other 299. This referendum was taken carefully. The written opinions were placed in sealed envelopes, in a sealed box and only opened after all had finished voting.

The occupation of the city in Moscow by the Bolshevists prevented the statue ever being erected and the final award was never given to the sculptor. Now an effort is being made by the committee to collect subscription for the purpose of erecting the statue.

Social Items

Tuesday evening, at the country home of Mrs. Chambers, a crowd of about a hundred people had a wonderful time. The occasion, the regular monthly meeting of the Beta Lambda Class of Glenwood S. S. Around an immense big bonfire all sorts of games were played. Weiners roasted, marshallows toasted, also coffee and doughnuts, were served.

Those present were members of the class and their husbands. Those responsible for this good time were: Mrs. Chambers, Mrs. Garrison, Mrs. Dupie, Mrs. Derso, Mrs. Lena Elliott, Mrs. Fippen, Mrs. Fishbaugh, Mrs. O. T. Flecher, Mrs. T. S. Fox, Mrs. Fred Geminhardt, Mrs. Gibson and Mrs. Hurmer.

A number of relatives and friends took basket dinner and motored to Jersey, Ohio, Sunday, Sept. 24, giving Mr. and Mrs. R. R. McKinley a complete surprise on their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. Tables were spread on the lawn, and a bountiful dinner was served. Before departing a purse of silver was given to Mr. and Mrs. McKinley, wishing them many happy years to come.

Those present were: Mrs. Nellie Hicks and family, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. McKinley and family, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Phillips, Mrs. William Six, son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Six and family, Mr. and Mrs. B. Young and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. O. Zimmers and family, Mrs. T. Zimmers, Miss Florence Thomas, the host and hostess.

A number of teachers from Highland Ave. School, accompanied by the following pupils of last year "Junior High," enjoyed a weiner roast on last Friday evening. Those present were: Messrs. Miller, Griffith, Corruthers, Misses O'Neil, Budd, Aubaugh, Tryens, Mary Fodey, Helen Oliver, Freda Leady, Dorothy Prior, Margaret Hazelbaker Margaret Stitt, Rose Baus, Walter Dean, John Postol, Joyce Curruthers, Harry Mix, Lawrence Hoffman, Leonard Martin.

The ladies of the W. E. G. Club entertained their husbands and children with an indoor picnic at the home of Mrs. M. W. Seiller, Wednesday evening, Sept. 20, 1922.

The picnic tables were set in various corners and nooks of the dining room, living room and den. After each person had his plate filled to the limit, with fried chicken and all that goes with good picnic suppers, we again fell in line for home-made ice cream, cake and coffee.

The evening was spent telling stories and doing stunts in the good old picnic fashion.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Walton, Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Shanley, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. P J. Coberly, Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Seiller, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Garrison, Jane, Charles and Staley Shanley, Dorothy and Eleanor Seiller, Judith Ann Garrison, Charles Wesley Walton, Wilford Coberly and Paddie Lou, Virginie and Chandler Gibson.

At 3:30 Saturday afternoon, the marriage of Miss Mary A. Fippin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Fippin, 69 South Warren avenue, to Mr. Burleigh E. Stout, of Dayton, took place at the bride's home in the presence of immediate relatives. Rev. R. T. Stimmel, pastor of Glenwood Methodist Episcopal church, performed the ceremony. The couple will live in Dayton.

Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Carr had as guests the past week, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Trumpower, of Los Angeles, Calif.; Mrs. Ralph Campbell and the Misses Vivirn Berry and Chattie Spohn, of Mansfield; Mrs. Martin Trumpower, Mrs. Harry Hughes, Mrs. Carr Sanborn and daughter, Janice, of Perrysville, Ohio.

A quiet home wedding took place Saturday evening, Sept. 16, at 8:30 p. m. at 49 Chase Ave., when Miss Florence Hoak became the bride of Mr. William Winters. Miss Ethel Clark acted as maid of honor, and Andrew Winters, brother of the groom, as best man. The bride wore a gown of white satin and wore a corsage of white rose. The maid of honor wore shell pink crepe taffeta and wore corsage of American Beauty roses. The groom and best man were attired in navy blue.

Rev. Stimmel performed the ceremony, in the presence of Mr. Hoak, Mr. and Mrs. Everett Mitchell and father and mother of the groom, of Covington, Ky. Mr. and Mrs. Winters will live in their new home at 49 Chase Ave.

The members of the Wisslohichan Club, families and friends, spent an enjoyable evening at their summer camp on Big Darby, Friday evening with a weiner roast. Next Friday will be another, at which a soloist of national fame will sing.

The Glenwood Women's Foreign Missionary will meet at the home of Mrs. H. G. Hamilton, 59 N. Ogden, Wednesday, Oct. 4, at 2 p. m. All members urged to be present.

Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Faib, 74 South Ogden Ave., have returned from a week's stay in New York.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Glenwood M. E. Church will meet Thursday afternoon, Oct. 5, at 2 o'clock. This will be the annual election of officers and reading of the annual reports. All members urged to be present.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Staehli, 251 South Harris Ave., and Mr. and Mrs. Earl I. Williams and sons, 38 N. Burgess Avenue, motored to Eaton, Ohio, Saturday morning to the home of Mrs. Williams' parents, Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Wiseman. They returned Sunday evening.

When Some of Us Were Boys

Mr. W. H. Orebaugh, real estate dealer, was born near the Ohio river, in Brown county, Ohio, in a log house with clapboard shingles, but spent most of his early boyhood days on a farm in Adams county. He worked several years for $10 a month and board, from sunrise to dark, feeding, plowing, harvesting, cutting corn, etc. After that he worked at cutting wood—4 ft. cordwood—at 35c a cord, and splitting rails at $1.00 a hundred, cutting down and trimming up the trees himself. All the spending money he ever had, he worked for it. First suit of store clothes he had, earned the money and paid for it himself. Mother wove the cloth and made his other clothes. Received a common school education. Wore coarse cow-hide boots. Came to the Hilltop during the year 1917.

William M. Link has lived in this community 76 years. Never lived further than seven miles from Columbus. Worked on a farm nearly all of his early days, got $13 a month, that being what best of hands got at that time. Worked 17 years at carpenter trade, helping frame large timbers for barns, at $1.00 a day. Hunted 'coons where Galloway now stands, got the big fellows. When a boy could set on a log in the region of Camp Chase and shoot a mess of squirrels without moving from the spot. Used to catch wild turkeys while they were at the corn early in the morning. Says they were like aeroplanes—had to run a while along the ground before they began to ascend. Lived during the war 1 1-2 miles north of Camp Chase, and soldiers at that camp used to steal apples from their orchard.

The Good Luck Knocker

By JANE OSBORN

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Myra Grimwade stopped at the nurseryman's on her way home from school one Saturday afternoon in October. She was buying some bulbs to be planted now for spring flowering. The nurseryman asked her if she did not want to set out any shrubs or small trees.

Myra hesitated. "I know the place lacks shade dreadfully," she said, "but it would be several years before they did anything."

"You aren't thinking of leaving, are you?" smiled the old nurseyman good naturedly.

"Oh, no," assured Myra, "only one hates to put a lot of money in a place on shrubs and trees when one isn't sure that one will stay long enough to enjoy them. I get my appointment by the school board only for a year at a time."

"I guess there's no chance the school board won't reappoint you," assured the nurseryman, who was well informed in local politics. "Why, there's Miss Snooks. She's taught in the schools for forty years."

Myra suppressed a sigh. "Forty years!" she gasped. "That's a long, long time."

But she went home with her bulbs without buying the shrubs.

Myra was twenty-four. She had been appointed to teach English in the high school in Dalton two years before when she left college, and because she had no family and didn't like boarding houses and did like the shady streets and quiet ways of the little town of Dalton, she had built a little house on an available lot on one of the newer streets of the town. She sometimes looked upon the purchase as an investment. Most of her neighbors thought of it as a sign that Myra Grimwade had decided to teach in Dalton the rest of her life.

One day Myra was browsing around a little second-hand furniture shop in a run-down neighborhood of old Dalton. She was looking for an inexpensive pair of andirons. She did not find the andirons, but she did come upon a much-tarnished brass knocker thrown in with other bits of junk in a decrepit old scuttle. She bought it for a song, making no comments that might induce the dealer to raise its price.

"It's one of those miserable old things," commented the dealer. "It came off a house they tore down somewhere around here. Had to chop the door down, almost, to get the knocker, but, then, the door was bust in, anyway. Nowadays they makes the knockers so they screw on easy, but this one has rivets that goes right through. If it hadn't 'a' been made so queer I might 'a' sold it before. But no one wanted to go to all that fuss to fasten it on."

Myra waited until she reached home to admire the knocker at leisure. It was large, and displayed a griffin's head of a stamp that Myra had never seen on any modern replicas. But she hesitated about putting it on her front door. Once it was attached, reasoned Myra, it would have to remain in place. If she left and sold her house, future tenants would not appreciate the old knocker; they would not pay her what it was worth. Besides, she wanted the knocker herself.

Then one day after a rather gloomy day at school and a gloomier visit from Miss Snooks, Myra gave instructions to a nearby carpenter to go to work and fasten the old knocker on her front door. The next day when she returned from school he was waiting to finish the job. Before her supper the knocker was in place. When it was knocked it sent out a booming sound that fairly shook the little house.

"I'm going to stay here the rest of my life," she told a younger teacher who called on her that evening. "I've had the knocker attached, so there is no selling out now. I'll be a second Miss Snooks—"

"Fiddlesticks, Myra," said her companion. "You'll marry, of course."

"Whom would I marry?" asked Myra, with eyes wide open.

"Don't ask me," laughed the other teacher. "Every girl has two or three men to choose from when the time comes."

"I haven't," said Myra simply. The other teacher shrugged her shoulders and the matter seemed to be settled.

The next day a letter came from Tom Jarrold, a letter that Myra had been expecting for many months. But when she opened it and read it she found that the letter said more than she had expected Tom Jarrold's letter would say. Briefly he wanted to marry her. He had been on a long business trip. Affairs had shaped themselves, as he would explain later. He had been released from an old engagement and now offered himself and his millions to Myra.

Myra at first felt resentment that Tom had not relieved her anxiety by writing before, then there was curiosity concerning the other engagement, of which she had never known. Later she was in a mood to write a letter that would amount to an acceptance. Then she looked up from her desk, saw the rivets of the knocker sticking through to the inside of the door, and wrote a letter of refusal.

"Somehow now that I've got that knocker attached I can't leave," she told herself. "Those old rivets seem to hold me right here to Dalton."

The letter was sealed and Myra started at a loud resounding knock. She opened the door and stood face to face with Bailey Hanway, known to every one in Dalton save newcomers like herself.

"Pardon me," he said, "but I saw our old knocker, your old knocker now, of course. You see, our family has lived here for centuries. That knocker was on the old Hanway house, torn down ten years ago while I was off at college. Then you know I was in France during the war and after that business kept me across for a while, and—well, I always intended to get hold of the old door knocker, but I never did. I just happened to see it as I was passing and I thought I'd stop."

Myra asked Bailey Hanway to sit down in her little living room. Explaining his attachment for the old knocker, he asked if it was possible that he might buy it back.

Then sounds of a tea kettle boiling over called Myra to the kitchen. As she went she asked Mr. Hanway to stay long enough to drink a cup of tea and Mr. Hanway very gladly accepted.

"I don't see how I can let you have the knocker," she explained over the tea cups. "You see, it is attached to the door. I just decided today that I could never leave Dalton and this little house because of the knocker, so I don't see how I'm going to part with it."

Mr. Hanway did not urge his point, but when he went that afternoon he asked if he might at least return the next day or two to see the old knocker so rich in childhood memories.

That evening Myra went to the post-office to dispatch her letter to Tom Jarrold. She did it now without regret. When she returned home she stroked the cold old griffin. "Good old knocker," she said, "He never would have come if it hadn't been for you."

The next day Bailey Hanway called again and somehow their acquaintance progressed rapidly. When he rose to go he said: "I wanted to induce you to let me have the knocker, but now I know I shall never want to have the knocker without the charming little woman who rescued it."

And the very next week all Dalton was talking of the surprising engagement of Myra Grimwade, a nobody, and Bailey Hanway, rich and influential descendant of the founder of the town.

ISLANDS THAT COME AND GO

One in Pensacola Bay Has Never Been Satisfactorily Explained by the Scientists.

In Pensacola bay, off Fair point and opposite the naval air station, a curious natural phenomenon has been many times observed. Once or twice in every year a mud island rises out of the deep water, and after several weeks sinks. The exposed top of it is about 40 feet long, and the clay of which it is composed is too soft to support the weight of a man. There is no evidence of liberation of gas, and no oily particles are observed on the water. The clay has no odor. Pile-driving for a marine railroad, 80 years old, disclosed the fact that the fine white sand of the bottom is underlaid by soft clay; but what is the agency that forces it up and creates the temporary island is a mystery.

Off the Atlantic coast of Central America "gas islands" (as they are called) occasionally appear. Often of considerable size, they rise above the surface of the sea, soon afterward explode and vanish. It is supposed that they are produced by gigantic bubbles of natural gas which force up small areas of the sea-bottom.

Empty Coffin Stood on End.

There seems to be an unwritten law that empty coffins when sent by express or as baggage are not to be left on station platforms in a horizontal position. They are nearly always stood on end or leaned against a wall. This has been noticed many times at the Woodlawn Cemetery station of the New York Central.

Railroad men don't know why they do it, but in two years an observer who has seen scores of coffins there has never seen one in a horizontal position.—New York Sun.

HAIRPINS MARK PERILOUS TRAIL

Each Time Girl's Mountain Mule Bumped, and It Bumped Often, She Lost One.

FIRST WOMAN TO CROSS ANDES

Love of Adventure Leads Girl to Face Disease, Landslides, Kidnaping and Other Exciting Experiences —Indians After Her.

New York.—A line of bone hairpins, the kind that sells for 10 cents a half dozen, marks the first trail across the Andes mountains ever attempted by a white woman.

Miss Katherine MacGregor of Waupaca, Wis., lost them from her bobbed hair every time her mule slipped on the narrow but not so straight paths along the sides of steep precipices.

Miss MacGregor does not look like an intrepid explorer. She is below middle height, of pleasing slimness, with blonde hair that curls at the rear. Her age, at a rough estimate, is somewhere between twenty-five and forty.

There was no reason in the world, as she sees it, why she should take to exploring the mountain and jungles of South America. Her father, Malcolm MacGregor, is of Scotch-Quaker descent. She, until seven months ago, was assistant to the general manager in a New York utilities office. The only traveling she had done previously had been limited to Pullmans and coaches.

"I guess it was because I wished to write stories of adventures mostly," is the best explanation she can give of the impulse that dared her to face disease, kidnaping, landslides, tigers and snakes. Even the American consul in Peru refused to have anything more to do with her when she told him of the trail she intended to follow. As for her father, he kissed her good-by once and for all when she had fully determined to start on her trip.

Tried to Kidnap Her.

"It was only after I reached Iquitos, a fairly large South American town, that I heard from two Englishmen in another exploring party what I had missed," Miss MacGregor recounted. "The two men had been held by Campas Indian chiefs, who had been told by their intertribal runners that a white woman was passing in a party. The chieftains have a great fondness for white women, and almost invariably succeed in kidnaping them. It was only after much torture that the Englishmen finally convinced the chief that I was not in their party. I passed two or three days sooner than I was expected—the only reason why they din't get me.

Once or twice, or perhaps a few times more, the American girl was frightened. On one occasion, had it not been for some fallen trees, she might have dropped to a dusty death along the mountain side.

"It was just after a landslide, and the path—it couldn't have been even a foot wide—was slippery," she said. "The four pack mules marched on ahead, but my mule lost its footing in the debris and plunged right down the side. An uprooted tree saved us. I pushed up again while the mule was hoisted up with a rope. I guess I must have been pretty scared that time."

Hotel accommodations were poor, as Miss MacGregor recalls them. Tambos, merely single rooms without baths, and the only running water that which leaked through the thatched roofs, offered the only shelter along the way. The more pretentious variety were sometimes stockaded with cowhide, but more often a tambo consisted of four poles, with dried grass for a cover.

Cooking was done over canned heat. It was imperative to boil the water, unless one wished to ward off malaria and other fevers with quinine. Miss MacGregor boasts that in all her trip she took only two grains of quinine, and that because she did not wish to offend an acquaintance.

She was accompanied by an Englishman hired in Peru upon the advice of friends, and by two muleteers. An Indian guide would have been out of the question, for the trip would have been brought to an untimely end, so far as she was concerned, Miss MacGregor believed.

Gentlemen Are Sentimental.

As for the technical details of her trip, she traveled to Key West from Chicago in an unsensational manner, then from Key West to Havana, then on a United Fruit steamer to Cristobal and from there to Peru, where she began her trans-Andean climb on June 20. For seven days she rode mule-back, two days she progressed in a dugout canoe on the Ucayali river, and until August 1 she walked, rode and paddled her way to Para, on the East coast. Her party cut its own trail through high, heavy tangled growths for the most part.

There were conquests not only of wild animals, but of South American gentlemen, but Miss MacGregor paid no attention to the proposals she received, for, she said, the fair American who could pass through the country without having a marriage thrust upon her is more to be commended than one who landed a mate.

Sailor's Will, Engraved on Disk, Is Probated

London.—Strange as the story of any document told in fiction is that of a will which has just been admitted to probate and is now filed in Somerset House.

It is the "last will and testament" of a sailor, William Skinner, who lost his life when his ship, the indefatigable, was sunk in the battle of Jutland. It is in the form of the ordinary identification disk. On one side, in the usual deeply punched letters, appears the name, number, rating and religion of the man to whom it had been issued.

On the other side the disk appears at first sight to be just a circular piece of smooth, polished brass. But when viewed at a certain angle there can be seen about 75 minutely engraved words. With a microscope they can be plainly read. They consitute Skinner's will by which he bequeaths everything to his wife. The disk had been recovered from the sea with Skinner's body and on being cleaned revealed its secret.

CROSS SHINES AGAIN

Throngs Worship in Belief That Miracle Has Been Wrought.

Soviet Leaders Force Priests of Rostoff Cathedral to Say That Gilding on Church Was Due to Wireless Action.

London.—An interesting tale comes to me from the city of Rostoff on the Don, in soviet Russia, writes a correspondent to the Daily Telegraph.

It will need some explaining on the part of our men of science, and I would not have mentioned it if the official soviet press had not done so. One morning citizens going at sunrise to attend early divine service in the great cathedral were surprised to see the cross on the cathedral dome sparkling as if it had been newly gilt. The golden crosses and cupolas of the Russian churches are a well known landmark, but, neglected under the Bolshevik regime, they have all become dull and tarnished. The great cross on the cathedral blazed, while the crosses on the small cupolas surrounding it remained dark. The people cried that a miracle had occurred.

From all parts of the town crowds precipitated themselves toward the market place. Very soon the cathedral was full to overflowing, and thousands of wax candles before the icons lit up its dark interior. People continued to arrive, filling up the market place. The great house occupied by the Cheka was just opposite. The Red sentries became apprehensive of an attack and called out the guard. The Red soldiers came forward to disperse the faithful, but they were overwhelmed and forced to take off their caps and make the sign of the cross. Cavalry arrived and re-established order with their heavy whips.

The clergy of the cathedral were arrested, brought into the Cheka building and, under menace of death, ordered to stop the "miracle" immediately. This the poor fellows naturally could not do. At last one of them had a brilliant idea, of which the leaders of the Cheka approved. The town was placarded with large notices explaining to the population that the gilding of the cross had been renovated by the action of the new high-powered wireless station just installed. The fact of the renewal of the cross is confirmed from several sources, but one doubts if the explanation of its wireless source is the correct one.

CLOUD CHASER FOR U. S.

Sydney.—Establishment of an unemployed workers' colony in northern Queensland, suggested by the unemployed workers' committee, is to be placed before the premier, following its approval by a mass meeting of the unemployed.

The objects of the project are to relieve distress and to demonstrate "that the working class is capable of managing and controlling industry," according to an announcement. It is suggested the colony obtain from the government free grants of land, and a cash subsidy equal to the amount raised by the colony, co-operate in clearing, preparing and cultivating land, produce foodstuffs and maintain suitable quarters. ## POPE'S AUTO PROVES PUZZLE

Italian Officials Finally Put Car in Diplomatic Corps Class in Granting License.

Rome.—After trying out in the Vatican gardens the automobile presented to him by the Milan archdiocese, Pope Pius has had it duly registered by the Italian authorities.

The government officials were rather embarrassed in fulfilling the papal request, as no previous pope had owned a motorcar. After lengthy discussion of the case they included the car in the diplomatic class and it consequently bears the license number CD (Corps Diplomatique) 55-325.

Spain Ousts Whole Mail Force Following Strike

The entire postal force of the Spanish postal service was dismissed by a governmental decree as a result of the recent strike which tied up the service for several days throughout Spain. The decree lays down rules for the reorganization of the postal staffs.

The strike, which paralyzed business throughout Spain, was actively waged by the letter assorters, who remained away from work, and indirectly by the other branches of the service, which conducted a "white strike," in which all reported for work, but listlessly attended to their duties.

FISH EASY PREY FOR TERNS

Masters of the Air, Are by No Means Afraid of the Leaping Waters.

The following description of the activities of the common tern is taken from the manuscript of a work on the birds of Massachusetts by the Department of Agriculture.

When the mackerel or the bluefish, moving in great hordes, find a school of "bait," the larger fish chase these until fry until the latter, in their efforts to escape, break water in all directions and skip over the waves like flying-fish, or mill around in a dense mass. The water all around is fairly boils under the savage onset of the pursuers. Then it is that the sharp-eyed terns, spying the commotion, flock from afar to feast on the helpless fishlings.

Though they hover in the sunlight, above the surging sea. The whirling, screaming white-breasted birds, sharply contrasted against the murky sky, alternately climb the air and poise like plummets straight down upon the waves or even below them—rising again, fluttering, poising, seeming to [illegible] fairly rains terns—hundreds of them together shooting downward into the maddened waves. Masters of the air, they play with the gusty blast and gambol with the leaping waters. Rising from the sea they shake the brine from their plumage and, towering higher, hover a moment breasting the gale, then set their wings and, like long, barbed spearheads, drop downward to plunge, again and yet again.

How Martha Became Engaged

By JESSIE DOUGLAS

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Well, Martha," Mrs. Kent said plaintively, "Mel dropped in to tell me he was engaged."

"Engaged!" Martha whispered.

The color reddened her fine white skin, and then she was as white as a pear blossom. She held up her head very high and walked out of the room. But when she had crossed the threshold, and was sure she was out of her mother's sight, she reached up furtively and wiped away the tears that were brimming her eyes.

Mel—engaged.

To Delia, of course—Delia, with her bobbed hair and her swinging earrings and pretty painted lips and her naughty dark eyes. Martha had seen it all along; she knew that he only dropped in on the Kents' honeysuckle-shadowed porch because it was so nearby. She knew that it was the tinkle of her iced tea in tall glasses, and her mother's cream cake, that he enjoyed better than all their conversation.

Her mother had told her over and over again that she must talk and laugh the way Delia did. But something in Martha raised a high stone wall across which she gazed at any young man with frightened, palpitant heart.

If the man were ever so old, or homely, or forsaken, Martha was charming. Her blue eyes danced, and the dimple in hiding came out to help her smile.

But that was just the trouble with Mel Hall. He was not old or homely or forsaken. All the girls in town were interested in him, and let him see it, too. Sometimes Martha thought he chose their shadowy, fragrant porch because he could take a little respite here from eternal flirtation and the following glances of admiring eyes.

Pulled Martha in After Him.

She couldn't talk to him. She could listen to him. She loved the sound of his deep voice with its velvet drawl. She loved to see him bend over his cigarette in the darkness while the lighted match showed her his clear-cut features—the boyish mouth, the straight nose, the teasing, laughing eyes she loved.

Loved. She came to that word and her heart seemed to drop away. She couldn't go on loving him in secret any more. Not when Delia, with her provocative glances and her cigarette-stained fingers, claimed him. Martha could almost fancy Delia laughing at her secretly all this time, and calling her "poor old maid!" for that was what her mother spoke of daily: "You'll be an old maid, Martha, with your stiff ways; that's not the way to treat men. Look at Delia!"

Oh, yes; her mother was right; but now, at least, she wouldn't spend any more of those times in which she told herself that she would try to copy Delia. She could just go on being herself, and not letting any one know that her heart was breaking under her pale organdie frock.

Yet she remembered how she had stolen up to her own room at night and had peered in at her face with the shy blue eyes, color of periwinkles, and at the shining hair that she unwound from the banded coils about her head, and thought he might grow to love her.

She wasn't the kind of girl who could laugh and play and tease, like her girls. . . . It was horribly old-fogyish and she knew it.

Sometimes Martha had slipped to knees and said a very short, very childish prayer, but after it was over she lay in her narrow white bed, and could almost believe that Mel Hall did come to care for her sometime. Every word that her mother said was true. She was just like a little frozen statue of a girl, a picture of a girl when Mel dropped in at the Kent's shady porch and smoked a cigarette for a moment before he swung on down the street.

And now he was engaged. All her tiny hopes were frustrated and Martha knew that now nothing mattered; that she could settle back and be an old maid in peace and even endure in advance the daily iteration of her mother's point.

Now she walked down the porch steps and down the street with the sprig of blue iris that she was taking to crippled Miss Davey.

There she was calmly going on about her errands as though her heart wasn't breaking within her!

"Hi, Martha!"

She lifted her head from the even pattern of her pavement to see that Mel Hall was waving to her. All of a sudden, she knew she wasn't afraid of him any more. He belonged to the unlikelies; the men who were almost too shy to talk to as women.

"I want to congratulate you!" Martha said quietly.

"Thanks," he said briefly, and rather shyly. "You know I was just looking at this house on the old Saunders place—it's to let—and wondering what could be done with it."

"I love old houses; let me explore it with you," Martha said calmly.

She knew very well he was looking at it for Delia Summers, but she didn't care. She did like old houses, and always planned how she would paint and paper and hang curtains.

Mel thrust up a window and pulled Martha in after him. She came in tumbling and rose cheeked and laughed with feigned gayety when she saw the blackness of his hands and her own dusty marks.

"Like the living room?" he asked suddenly.

"Why, it's darling! You can paint the woodwork ivory white and put up orange curtains and get that lovely old mahogany down at Henderson's. Here's a hearth and space between the windows for bookshelves," she rambled on delightedly, until she saw him watching her, and remembered, with hot-cheeked dismay, that it was his house and Delia's she was planning.

"Go on," he said. "Do the dining room!" as they strolled into the long bay-windowed room.

"It's your turn," she said.

He told her that he'd like it in blue; he'd always wanted a dining room in blue, but would she like it?

"Do you mean would Delia like it?" Martha asked, drawing back.

"Delia—what do you mean—what's she got to do with it?"

"Why, aren't you going to marry Delia?" Martha asked in a shocked tone.

He came over and caught hold of both her hands and said simply, "No, I'm going to marry you!"

She found she was kissing him back and then she tried to push him away from between her choked voice and her tears she whispered. "But you're engaged, mother told me—"

"As superintendent of the lower mill!" he shouted. "You adorable little goose. You don't think when a man could have a real girl that he'd ever want a silly flapper with earrings and bobbed hair?"

Martha could only turn her hot face against his shoulder and wonder how it had ever happened to her.

HAVE THEIR HOMES IN CAVES

Abodes of Desert Tribes That Are Said to Be Both Healthful and Comfortable.

In the Tunisian and Tripolitan parts of the Sahara, more especially in the region of limestone formations, there are the celebrated cave dwellers, whose inhabitants were first described by the Greek geographers before the Christian era.

The rock shelter is the simplest form. The soft rock at the side of a hill is dug out. Each generation adds more compartments until a whole apartment house has been created.

Another style of underground dwelling in Tunis is dug in flat limestone formations. A large square hole is dug excavated like a quarry. This is a sort of courtyard; the individual rooms and houses are dug in the sides above this. A diagonal passageway leads to the surface, and is made large enough for camels to pass down.

The charm of these dwellings is that they maintain an equable temperature all year around. The limestone surface on exposure to the air becomes hardened. The caves are both healthful and comfortable.

Slips of the Tongue.

Everybody is presumed to have heard of the man who said to a stranger whom he found in his seat at church one Sunday morning: "I beg your pardon, sir, but you are occupewling my pie." A near relative, probably a descendant of this man, who answers to the name of Smith, was dining with a friend. The soup had been brought on, and the wife of the host was apologizing for it.

"I am afraid you will find it seasoned too highly, Mr. Smith," she said. "I tell Susan every day of my life not to use so much salt and pepper in her cooking, but it doesn't do any good."

"The soup is all right, Mrs. Jones," the guest hastened to assure her. "It's exactly seasoned to my taste."—Philadelphia Ledger.

SCHOOL SUPPLIES AT WEBER'S

An auto truck on fire near Broad and Terrace, Tuesday afternoon, called the fire department to that locality. Small damage was done.

"Hilltonia" is the name of the new addition opened up last week south of Sullivant Ave. west of the Baby Camp.

Miss Gertrude Griggs, 131 South Hague, has returned from a vacation trip to Cleveland and Canton, Ohio.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Canada and son Harry, of Corning, Ohio, spent few days with Mr. and Mrs. J. V. Bowser of 132 N. Burgess Ave. Harry underwent an operation at Grant Hospital for removal of tonsils and adenoids.

The putting in of the double tracks on Broad Street has made getting around on that thoroughfare mighty unhandy; but suppose we ought to all be patient about it since we will soon be relieved of the old switch nuisance that we have experienced for so many years.

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Chenoweth, of London, Ohio, were guests of Dr. and Mrs. Whitehead, last Sunday.

Mr. Thomas Jerman of Highland Ave., received a slight stroke of appoplexy last week, but is improving now.

The Philathea Class of Glenwood M. E. Church will hold a bake sale at Seiller's Store on Saturday, October 7th.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Basler of 353 N. Burgess, have returned from a two weeks' visit with Mrs. Basler's mother in Athens.

Mrs. Florence Gilliam Moss, former teacher at West High, would like to hear from her one time pupils, her address is—Mrs Florence G. Moss, Gargoyle 7, rue Campagne—Premiere, Paris, France.

Mrs. Mary Powell, of Linden, was the guest of her niece, Mrs. Sarah Gray, last Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Hall, 344 Belvidere, accompanied by Mrs. Walters and Mrs. Evans, have just returned from a delightful trip to Des Moines, Iowa, where they were attending the encampment of the Grand Army.

Geo. A. Henry, 257 N. Ogden Ave., left last week to attend the Telephone Pioneers of America convention at Cleveland, Ohio.

Miss Ruth Merriman of Eureka Ave., who was elected secretary to the Glenwood Methodist Church, began her new duties Monday.

Miss Elva Hartman of Wadsworth, Ohio, has resumed her studies at O. S. U. and is making her home with her sister, Mrs. M. W. Seiller.

Dr. W. M. Baker, Dentist, 2393 1-2 West Broad street. Hilltop 4441. School.

At a meeting of the Hilltop Chamber of Commerce Tuesday night, a committee of fifteen was appointed to devise plans, etc., looking to the establishing of the Dr. Holmes library on the Hilltop. This library contains over 3,000 volumes of choice books, most of which will be of value to our school pupils, and would be a valuable asset to the Hilltop. Mr. W. L. Millikin is chairman of the committee, which is to report at next meeting.

A passing automobile striking a small stone in front of Budd's barber ship, this week, caused the stone to shoot out with such force as to bang against the large plate glass window of the above shop and knock a hole in it, cracking it from top to bottom. A new glass had to be put in.

The 11th Ward Republican Club had a most enjoyable time at the home of S. W. Colburn on Sept. 28, and the members are looking forward with great anticipation to the next meeting which will be held on Thursday evening, Oct. 5, 1922, at 7:30 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Elliott, 2614 W. Broad Street.

The women are especially urged to come and assist at these meetings and to hear the issues of the present campaign discussed.

The First Division of the Glenwood M. E. Aid Society will hold their regular meeting on Thursday evening, October 5, at the home of Mrs. W. L. Millikin, 55 S. Warren Ave., instead of Tuesday, October 3, as previously announced. Meeting to start promptly at 7:30. All members urged to attend.

The J. E. B. Sunday School class of Glenwood M. E. Church will meet at 7:30 p. m., Tuesday, with Mrs. Simmons, 69 Clarendon Ave. Mrs. Young, Mrs. Tiller, Mrs. Suver and Mrs. Walpole will be assisting hostesses. It has been requested that all come masked.

This is the week when all have a chance to help boost the Children's Hospital Drive. This is one of the most worthy causes that has been presented to the public for support, and commends the co-operation of all. The campaign closes Saturday.

Miss Vergie Carter has resumed her work as bookkeeper at the Seiller store after a week's vacation, which was spent at Steubenville, Ohio, the home of her sister, Mrs. Harry Holroyd.

Mrs. Olive Tomlinson and son, Allen, are now living at 63 N. Terrace.

The Second Division of Glenwood Ladies' Aid Society will meet at the home of Mrs. Rousch, 80 Eldon Ave., Tuesday, October 10, at 2 o'clock. Mrs. Hanawalt will be assistant hostess. Election of officers will take place. A good attendance is desired.

THRIFT HABIT POPULAR

Average of More Than One Savings Account for Every Family.

Reports to Bankers' Association Give Partial Data for Year Ended June 30, 1921—Total Amount Exceeds $16,600,000,000.

New York.—An average of more than one savings account for every family in the United States is indicated in partial data for the country, compiled by the savings bank division of the American Bankers' association, revealing more than 20,600,000 savings depositors. In addition, there are at least 10,000,000 other owners of savings accounts of varied forms whose numbers cannot be reduced to definite figures.

The summary follows:

"Complete data is practically impossible to obtain under present statistical conditions in regard to savings. But even with all figures lacking for the thousands of state-chartered banks which accept savings in Illinois, Missouri and twenty-three other states, and the District of Columbia, and with only the mutual savings banks out of all the state banks and trust companies in Indiana, Ohio and New Jersey included, the number of savings accounts reported by the federal and state supervisors of banks reached a total of 20,837,831 on June 30, 1921, which is the only date for which the statistics are available. The figures are made as follows:

|---|---|
| Mutual savings banks (7 States) | 9,654,9[illegible] |
| Other State banks (13 States) | 6,190,33[illegible] |
| Trust companies (8 States) | 3,713,9[illegible] |
| Private banks (New York only) | 72,9[illegible] |
| National banks (all States) | 8,015,72[illegible] |
| Total reported | 28,637,831 |

"In addition there are millions of savings depositors in the non-reporting states above mentioned, which include not only the South with the exception of the Virginias, but also the great states between the Mississippi and the Rockies except Minnesota. Furthermore, there are perhaps three million owners of time certificates of deposit, which are used in place of savings accounts in rural sections; also the half million patrons of the postal savings system, five million members of building and loan associations and other millions who invest the proceeds of their thrift with life insurance, real estate mortgage and standard industrial and other corporations.

"The total of savings deposits recently was reported by the savings bank division of the American Bankers' association as amounting on June 30, 1921, to $16,618,595,000."

FIGHT FIRE AND WATER IN WRECK

American Professor, Wife and Children Have Exciting Experience in Argentine.

OIL-LADEN VESSEL BLOWS UP

Battle in Water With Fear-Crazed Passengers—Burning Oil Spreads Over Water and Many Are Horribly Burned.

New York.—A burning ship surrounded by a sea of blazing gasoline, attacks by passengers crazed with fear that threatened to impede escape and the buffeting of rough waves were the obstacles that Professor Edward K. Kemmerer of Princeton University, his wife and two children battled against and overcame when the steamer Villefrance was wrecked in the Parana river, Argentine, last June.

Professor Kemmerer, a noted economist, who was at one time financial adviser to the Mexican and Guatemalan governments, returned recently with his family.

It was a dramatic narrative of a fire and shipwreck and the many obstructions that he and his family had to surmount before reaching shore that the professor unfolded. The Kemmerers are the only cabin survivors of the river tragedy.

"We were awakened at 2 a. m. by a roaring explosion," Professor Kemmerer began. "We were in bed and jumped out clad only in our night clothing. Running to the companionway, we found the ship ablaze from stem to stern.

Fire on All Sides.

"We reached the deck, where there were sweeping flames and saw oil burning on the water on all sides. Women and children were running about, some with clothing afire, men were fighting and people were jumping overboard.

"It was terribly hot and people were shouting and shrieking all about and there was great confusion. We saw it all in an instant and we knew we had no time to lose. Suddenly the ship began to list.

"My wife and children—Ruth, twelve, and Donald, sixteen—are good swimmers. I shouted to them to run to the rail and we waited there a few minutes. We could see people who had jumped overboard who had been seized by the flames and were terribly burned, and all seemed to be drowning.

"We saw gradually the flames were dying out, as the oil surface was consumed. That was our chance for life. We dived over. The dive carried us out of reach of the flames near the ship. We swam under water a while.

"There was wreckage about us and many were struggling in the water. We got some distance from the vessel when there was another explosion. That was followed by more flames on the water, as more oil was blown out of the ship's hold where the cargo of gasoline was stored. We looked back and could see the ring of the fire coming on toward us.

Seized by Drowning Man.

"Suddenly I heard my wife scream, she had been seized by a drowning man who had gripped her and would have carried her down. Before I could reach her she had released herself and was swimming on. She was quite exhausted from the effort, however, and she had injured her leg, which had been broken several years ago.

"A man who had been burned and driven insane was on top of a table which had blown from the ship. He sprang off the table on me and after a severe struggle I succeeded in disengaging myself from him.

"When I had done so I found the sea was running higher and we became separated, and unable to get together. Finally, we brought up to shore at various points and were cared for by the natives. It was two hours before I found by wife and children. My wife's face was slightly burned but she has recovered from it."

NAME CAVE FOR EXPLORERS

Lewis and Clark Cave in Montana Has Fine Collection of Stalactites and Stalagmites.

Butte, Mont.—Morrison cavern, 45 miles southeast of here, said to have been discovered in 1905 by George Morrison, has been placed under the supervision of the superintendent of national parks and renamed the Lewis and Clark cave in honor of the famous explorers.

The cavern has a collection of stalactites and stalagmites which is said to have few rivals in the country. After the proper lighting has been installed the large natural museum will be opened to the public.

The mouth of the passageway to the cave is at the summit of a limestone cliff 1,200 feet above the Jefferson river. The main room of the cave is large enough to permit holding large meetings there.

Five Kittens and One Tail.

Solon Springs, Wis.—This is not the tale of a cat, but the tale of five cats with one tail.

Edward Coy, a farmer, living near here, was startled when the old gray cat brought in five kittens—all joined to one tail.

OUTWITS FATHER TIME

Mrs. Margaret J. Blair, aged sixty, who can turn handsprings. She says a woman is as young as her knee joints. She proves it by doing stunts her eight-year-old grandson can't imitate. She taught domestic science at the University of Minnesota for 18 years. Her diet rule is an onion, an olive and a prune a day.

HAS TROUSERS 25 YEARS OLD

Farmer Says Home-Made Tow-Linen Pants Excel Present-Day Summer Trousers.

Fulton, Mo.—J. N. Hook, a retired farmer, lays ownership to a pair of pants that are twenty-five years old, and almost as good as the day they were made. Hook says they excel even the present-day summer trousers that are supposed to bring coolness and comfort. They are a pair of real honest-to-goodness home-made trousers of "tow-linen." They show some evidences of wear, but still are entirely serviceable. The flax from which they were made was grown in Callaway county and hacked by Hook's stepmother, who also spun it, wove it and made the trousers.

Africa Appeals to U. S. for Hair Kink Remover

A hair kink remover is desired by natives of several semi-civilized tribes of African natives, says a report to the United States Department of Commerce at Washington. Africans are strangely interested in stories of inventions by white men that far outshine the magic of the native wizard, it is said.

CUT COST OF HELIUM

Government Makes Greatest Price Reduction on Record.

Cost is Dropped From $2,000 to Nine Cents a Cubic Foot, and May Be Reduced to Five Cents—Only Plant in World.

Fort Worth, Tex.—The biggest price reduction on record has just been put into effect here by the government's helium plant. The cost has been cut from $2,000 to 9 cents a cubic foot! Even at that there is no crowd at the doors to take advantage of the great reduction. Experiments are now going forward to make the cost only 5 cents.

An immense warehouse at the plant has stored in it 2,000,000,000 cubic feet of helium. Two weeks ago two carloads of the product were shipped East for army use. The institution has been closed for six months, but recently resumed operation, congress having appropriated $800,000, which will keep the plant working for one year. When the plant is in full swing it is expected that 150 men will be employed there, and work will continue day and night.

This is the only helium plant in the whole world, giving this government a monopoly of the supply. Experiment has shown that only the Texas gas contains helium. Gas from other states and other countries, when tested, did not contain the element.

The Fort Worth plant was erected during the war and its first shipment was sent East before the war ended, but before it could reach France the armistice was declared. If the dirigibles during the war had been able to use helium, Lanham says military authorities informed him, the great conflict would have lasted no more than a year. On the other hand, if Germany had possessed this helium plant she could have sent her Zeppelins broadcast and destroyed cities in France and England without danger to the Zeppelins.

IS FIGHTING BOLL WEEVIL

Intensive study and experimentation is being carried on by J. L. Webb of the Department of Agriculture in charge of the southern field crop to find a means of eliminating the boll weevil, which has caused such a wholesale destruction of the cotton crop. Unless some remedy is applied, it will be only a question of a few years before the supply of cotton will be inadequate to meet the domestic needs much less the world demand, Mr. Webb declares. Present loss to this country from the ravages of the weevil amounts to a billion dollars a year. Photo shows Mr. Webb studying a few specimens of the boll weevil.

NINE JAP FLYERS DIE IN YEAR

During the Same Period 25 Were Wounded in 39,251 Flights, Says Report.

Tokyo.—During the last year in Japan nine aviators were killed and twenty-five wounded in 39,251 flights, the gross mileage of which was 812,980. These statistics were issued by the aviation department of the war office and include naval, military and civilian flyers, in reply to complaints that accidents had been frequent of late. These accidents, it is explained, were due to adverse atmospheric conditions above the central district of the country during spring and summer.

"As a whole, airplane accidents in this country are by no means so numerous as the recent frequency of accidental falls is apt to lead the people to believe," says the report.

Big Blue Oval Meteor Found on River Bottom

Fergus Falls, Minn.—A dredge working in the river here, below the central dam, brought up a meteor two feet long and shaped like an egg. The meteor is blue in color, heavier than granite, and hundreds of pebbles are buried in it. Engineers say it must have struck the river while flaming hot, and the pebbles sank into it when it fell.

Where One Dream Ends

By A. W. PEACH

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Robert Winston laid his brushes and palette aside and listened. The old studio building had once been soundproof, but time had worked a mysterious change—at least between Winston's studio and hers. She was making her piano speak of haunted things, even through the old walls. The music was softened, but it came to him with something of the charm of music that drifts across moonlit waters.

Finally, he shook himself from the spell, drew out a small electric heater, and swiftly prepared an attractive lunch. Then he calmly marched upstairs and knocked on her studio door. He was a bit afraid of her, for she had seemed to him a very haughty little person, but any girl who had played right through the afternoon into the evening merited some interruption, if only long enough to eat.

The music ceased, the door opened, and the small oval face, in which unusually dark eyes were set, looked out with cold query.

"Robert Winston, impressionist, presents his compliments to Avis Ronald, depressionist, and invites her to a repast with him, for the day is far done and the darkness—" he began.

"But I—"

She looked so weary, and a bit troubled with some inner doubt that made her hesitate, that he did what he hardly thought he possessed the courage to do—he serenely reached out and took her hand.

"Come, child, you have practiced long enough. Look upon my gray hairs and be obedient," he announced.

"You See, I Read Human Hearts—"

She glanced quickly at his temples, where faint streaks of gray were beginning to show, and smiled. "I will go, but, please, promise you won't be as nice to me as you usually are!"

He looked at her with astonishment; her voice was half serious, half whimsical. "You shall command me!" he answered with finality.

She sank into the big lounging chair in his studio with a faint sigh of relief, and he drew up the little table on which he spread the lunch.

She was in a somber mood, though she made some effort to match his cheerfulness; and with his knowledge of the ways of human hearts, he knew she had come to one of those dark days when the game does not seem worth the candle.

When the lunch was out of the way he leaned forward. "Now look, Avis, there is something very much wrong. You see, I read human hearts—"

The look in her dark eyes as they rested upon him was perplexing. "I wonder," was all she said.

"Yours I can read. Something is going wrong. Now we are neighbors and friends. Can't I help you?"

She shook her head. "Oh, it is nothing. I am just a-wondering whether—but you wouldn't understand!"

He saw it was useless to try to draw her out. "I think I could, and you know you can count upon me if I can be of use!"

"Very kind of you, and I thank you, sir," she replied in the same puzzling tone.

They chatted of this and that—"the nothings that make up life"—and then she rose from the chair. She held out her hand. "You have been very good to me—in spite of the noise I make over your head—and I am grateful to you."

He was downright puzzled. His first impulse was to wrap his arms about her, draw her dark head close to his, make her tell what was on her mind. He suddenly realized how she had stolen into his heart, what she had meant to him; but her dark aloofness checked him, and the good-night he gave her was merely the pleasant bantering good-night of friendship.

He was away from the studio most of the day, returning in the evening. His day had been a busy one, but for some mysterious reason his thought of her had been on his mind. Thinking he heard a slight stir above him, he went up, but there was no answer to his knock; yet, going down the stairs he met Tim, the janitor, and in response to a casual question Tim replied that Miss Ronald had gone to her studio, he thought.

He tried to compose himself to work, but he was restless. He went upstairs again and knocked on her door. Silence answered him. Profoundly puzzled, he called her name softly, and was certain he heard a faint sound within. Then he took the situation by the horns.

"Avis, open this door or I will get Tim. Please, I have something important to tell you!"

The door opened slowly, and she was facing him. His quick, trained eyes saw in her girlish face fear, fright, and some terrible determination. He closed the door quickly. "Avis, what is it? Tell me!" He caught her to him. "I have been worried for some strange reason all day. Tell me—I want to know—and—"

With his arm around her slight waist, he held her to him in spite of the effort she made to release herself. Then she held out one small, finely formed little hand.

"The trouble?" she said in a dead, wistful voice. "It is enough. I have felt my hand growing numb, I thought, I practiced all yesterday afternoon to drive it away. This morning I could not move it, and this afternoon a specialist told me I would never use it again—paralysis. You see"—she spoke with dangerous quiet—"I have overdone my practicing. Tried too hard to make a dream come true, and now it's gone!"

She did not weep. There is a stage beyond weeping, beyond despair. He knew something of its meaning. He looked down at the dark head. He noted that her left hand was hidden. He pulled it into view. In it was a small bottle, and his cry of fear went into his words:

"Avis, what is that—poison?" he cried in a choked voice.

She nodded simply. He caught the bottle, threw it aside, then gathered her in his arms and sat down. "Look here, little girl, this, I think, is the luckiest thing that ever happened. I have been in love with you from the first time I saw you. When one dream ends, another always begins, if we keep our eyes and hearts open. Your dream of a musical career is over. Let's dream of other—ours together! What do you say?"

The helpless little hand made it possible for him to say what he otherwise never could have said to her. He spoke softly, quietly, swiftly, commanding himself with effort. She began to relax, weeping softly. When she spoke her whispered words were music to him.

"I wanted you to love me, but—but I thought it was just friendship. I would have given up my music for you—for I—I loved you, too—from the first, but I didn't think you cared for me—"

He settled that—without the aid of words; and the other dream began.

No documentary biography of Mark Twain will have much of a sale in Excelsior Springs, Mo., which does not include a letter written by him in the early '80s ordering a barrel of Siloam water. Excelsior Springs hasn't any proof that Twain ever drank the water, but, just as the folks of the little town of Florida, Mo., will point out to the stranger the place where Samuel L. Clemens was born, and the people of Hannibal will lead him past the house in which the humorist spent his boyhood, so will the old timers of Excelsior Springs take him into the offices of the water company and, with surpassing pride, spread out before him a time-yellowed page which bears the following message:

"Messrs. Fish and Henry—Gents: I have been the advertisement of your springs. You say the water cures Bright's disease, diabetes, rheumatism, gout, liver complaint, bronchitis and itch. I think that is what the matter with me is. Please send me a barrel of your water expressed C. O. D., and if I like it I will take all you've got.

Marriage a la Mode.

Petting is one of the greatest amusements of young people of today, but in few countries is there such freedom of speech and action as here.

In China, for instance, not only is lovemaking taboo among young people, but it is forbidden even to speak of love. An engaged couple may not mention their coming nuptials. All is attended to by the parents.

His Opinion.

"Here's an item in the paper," said Mrs. Johnson, in the midst of her reading, "about a professor, up East somewhere, that says there will be dogs in heaven."

"He's mighty right," agreed Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge. "It would be hell if there wasn't."—Kansas City Star.

Tourist Camp Notes

We are told that there are three kinds of tourists now-a-days. One class is called the "fakirs," who seem to drift around with no particular place in view—only bent on getting the "spoils." Then there are the "Tin Can Tourists" (a good class of tourists), who seem to have sort of an organization and "turn down" the fakir class. Then a class that do not recognize any set class.

There appears to be a fascination that gets hold of most of the tourists, creating a condition that makes it hard for one, after being on the road a season, to settle down again. We were told last week by one party that they have traveled so much in their machine that they can't be content even to stay in one place very long, but must keep on going; and the fact of sleeping indoors would seem a terrible ordeal to them.

There have been about 1900 campers at Glenwood Camp during the season, to date. The lateness of the season is causing a let-up now. The average daily registration during the summer was nearly 40, but now it is only about 18 a day, and dropping off.

J. M. Hershey and family, of Carmel, Ind., stopping on their way to Scranton, Pa., said this was the first camp they had struck.

W. N. Evans and wife passed a night here from their home in Duluth, Minn., to Buffalo, N. Y. They had gone 1400 miles, with no trouble.

Mr. I. H. Case and wife, of Cleveland, have traveled in their Buick about 7,000 miles since June, visiting Ohio, Michigan and Indiana. Mrs. Case asks, "Why don't the government preserve some of the old canal lands—for historical value, if for no other purpose—even if it were not more than a few of the old locks?" They like Glenwood Camp just as it is, without the modern improvements some camps have. Say the modern camps seem too much like the accommodations of modern city life, and they prefer to get away from that.

Mr. H. Thomson and wife, of Philadelphia, have been out in their Ford for over a year—East, West, North, South and Canada. They are on their way home to get another start. Say they're going South for the winter to save buying coal. Have traveled over 20,000 miles and seen wonderful sights. Denver, Colo., has a wonderful camp—cost $30,000. In a camp on the Swanee river in Florida, a spring pouring out 1,000 gallons of fine, pure water a minute attracts thousands to its side. Say the Ford is the only machine to travel in, as one can get parts anywhere in the west, in drug stores, dry goods stores, or even at a 10c store.

ALIVE; SCOLDS UNDERTAKER

Victim of Catalepsy Complains Long and Loudly of Funeral Rites in Progress.

London.—The story of how a "dead" man scolded an undertaker is told by the Paris correspondent of the Daily Express.

A railway employee named Pierre Lesmelin on Saturday complained of strange pains in his head, and he went to bed. When the caretaker of the flat visited him some time later his breathing had apparently stopped and his heart had ceased to beat.

The woman concluded that the man was dead. She reported his death to the authorities at the town hall and sent telegrams to his relatives in the province. Then she laid the body out for burial and placed candles at the head and foot.

On Monday arrangements were made with an undertaker and a grave was prepared. The undertaker and his assistant duly arrived with a coffin, but when they entered the room they found the supposed "dead" man loudly complaining of the indignities which had been inflicted on him.

Lesmelin had been in a state of catalepsy

HUNT SECRET OF YOUTH IN TIBET

English Expedition Hopes to Penetrate Mysteries of Ancient Monasteries.

PRIESTS HAVE STRANGE POWER

Mission Expects to Find Rare Volumes Written Shortly After the Great Deluge—Are All of Buddhist Faith.

London.—The veil of mystery which shrouds Tibet and the forbidden city of Lhassa may soon be pushed aside.

Recently a group of English investigators left London for Tibet. There they hoped to obtain from Buddhist priests secrets of great and mysterious powers they are rumored to possess.

If the expedition succeeds it may mean a great step forward for the white race—or it may mean nothing at all.

The investigators are headed by D. W. M. McGovern. One of the principal rumors they will investigate is the statement that Tibetans have the power to lengthen the span of human life.

Know Secret of Youth.

It is said there are Tibetan priests who have been in the priesthood more than a century. It has been believed that the priests possess the secret for which Ponce de Leon sought in vain. Whether there is any truth in the belief is one of the things in which the mission is interested.

Another matter the mission proposes to investigate is the belief that Tibetan monasteries contain books written thousands of years before the art of letters was introduced into the western world.

It has been rumored that in some of these monasteries, where no white man has ever been allowed to enter, are rare volumes written shortly after the great flood, giving an authentic account of the great deluge. Thus far the white world has been compelled to rely upon the Jewish legend contained in the Bible and the legends of other peoples.

Wealth in Libraries.

London is confident the investigators will find material of great importance in the libraries, records which will clarify many puzzling chapters in the early history of the world.

Whether or not the mission will accomplish the great things expected of it remains to be seen. Tibet has never welcomed intrusion from the outside world. A few short years ago a white man took his life into his hands to visit the country.

In the last few years, however, the attitude of the country has changed slightly—perhaps on account of Great Britain's invasion.

One thing which will be in favor of the men composing the English mission is the fact that all connected are of the Buddhist faith. The leader is a Buddhist priest and as such will be able to get into much closer touch with the priests who guard the great secrets, if such they are, than would one of the Christian faith.

The members of the mission are not so sanguine about finding a fountain of youth, but they do believe their investigations will be of great historical value. All this provided, of course, that Tibet allows itself to be "investigated." If not, about as much as the average tourist

Little Boy Tramp.

Kansas City, Mo.—Frank Neely, nine years of age, of Muskogee, Okla., claimed the runaway championship of the world. Frank, found asleep in an automobile here after riding the rods of a freight train from Muskogee, admitted it was his thirtieth adventure. "He has not been at home three months since he was six years old," his dad wrote the sheriff.

Coin, Marked Six Years Ago, Back.

Columbus, Ind.—Six years ago Miss Mayme Kimsey of this city marked a silver dollar with her initials, "M. K.," and then spent it. Miss Kimsey now is Mrs. Harley Settle. Recently Mrs. Settle attended a circus here. She presented a $5 bill and silver dollars were among the change she received. One of the coins proved to be the dollar she had marked.

Bull Attacks Trainman When Engine Struck It

Knocked down by a locomotive when it wandered on the railroad tracks in front of a train near Braintree, Mass., a big bull charged a flagman who descended from the last car in the train and walked back along the tracks with his red flag in his hand. Seeing the bull running toward him, the flagman fled and leaped to the platform of the rear car, with the enraged animal half a jump behind him.

RED CLERGY PLAN NEW LIVE CHURCH

Calls All-Russian Conclave to Decide the Fate of Orthodoxy.

TO GET CLOSER TO MASSES

New Movement Is Against Supporters of Old Byzantine Church Service Which Demands Splendor in All Its Glory.

Moscow.—The "Red clergy," led by a group of young men, held its first congress here early in August and discussed plans to establish a new "live church." It was contended that the church must be brought nearer to the masses, and that the "new church" should be as "simple and as humble as was Christ himself."

The aims of the "Red clergy," so-called because of its acknowledgment of the social revolution and the soviet internationale, include liquidation of the superiority of the regular clergy in Russian church affairs, doing away with the reactionary section of higher clergy who, it is claimed, are still hoping for a coup d'etat to sweep them into power again, and preparation of an all-Russian conclave at which a successor to Patriarch Tichon is to be elected.

Orthodoxy in Split.

The "Red clergy" group, headed by Archbishop Antonin and a number of young Moscow and Petrograd clergymen, came into existence as a result of a split among the Russian Orthodox clergy, brought about soon after confiscation of church treasures was started by soviet government officials.

Because of the opposition which developed among the ruling church authorities, a number of the clergy were prosecuted in various parts of Russia, even Patriarch Tichon himself having been placed on trial. Many sentences of death were imposed, some of which were carried into effect, and various other archbishops, bishops and clergymen were given jail sentences.

Realizing that the conflict between the state and the church threatened the very existence of the church itself, the group of young clergymen took the initiative and demanded the abdication of Patriarch Tichon. The patriarch yielded to the demands, and immediately afterward the movement of the "live church" was inaugurated.

Oppose Splendid Service.

The new movement, first of all, is against supporters of the old Byzantine church service which demands splendor in all its glory. It is contended that the costly miters of gold studded with jewels, the magnificent vestments, the priceless rugs, are too significant of aristocracy.

"In all this splendor," claim the young clergymen, "little room is left for the light of Christ's mercy and love." The church must be brought nearer to the masses—it should be "proletarised." And it is on these grounds that the "Red clergy" have recognized the revolution, its results, and the internationale.

The live church proposed also to clear the churches and parish councils of counter revolutionary clergy and to remove the vow of celibacy for bishops.

TAP LAST PINE FOREST

Great Tract in Oregon to Be Laid Under the Axe.

Will Be Cut in Rotation so Its Timber Will Never Give Out—When Last Unit Is Cut First Will Be Ready for Cutting Again.

Washington.—The last great tract of untouched pine timber in the United States is soon to be tapped.

Behind the announcement of the forest service regarding the proposed sale of timber in the Malheur National forest, Ore., says a statement by the National Lumber Manufacturers association, lumbermen see the last opportunity for their trade to deal with a virgin pine forest of great extent, and the last opportunity for the settler to take possession of a region remote from railways and markets and virtually unused agriculturally.

"The opening for sale of the timber of the Bear Valley unit of the Malheur National Forest," says the statement, "affects 800,000,000 feet of the great Blue mountains forests now, and means the beginning of the lumbering of the entire forest with its more than 7,000,000,000 feet of timber. To begin the lumbering operations it will be necessary to build about 80 miles of main line railway, besides tap lines which will open for settlement an agricultural country with area of 10,000 square miles.

"While this ancient forest is doomed the terms are such that the succession of its sylvan posterity is secure. Though the timber now offered for sale by the forest service is sufficient only to keep a moderate sized mill running continuously for twenty years the service will at the end of that time open up another unit and eventually 7,000,000,000 feet of timber will be available. It is reckoned that by the time the last unit is cut over the first one will be ready for cutting again.

"The agricultural development to ensue upon the lumbering activities, which will employ hundreds of men, and the necessary railway building, will demonstrate the policy of using the national forests as an adjunct of the general progress and welfare of adjacent regions. According to the forecast of the forest service there will be at least one logging and lumbering unit that will never have to move on to find new forests, at least one sawmill town, which will never die for lack of material for its industries."

Social Items

The North Burgess Avenue Needle Club entertained their husbands and families at a wiener and marshmallow roast Wednesday evening, October 4, at the beautiful country home of Mr. and Mrs. Will Dolder, one mile west of Briggsdale. The Dolder house is situated on the top of a large hill. After the huge logs had been gathered, the east slope made a delightful place to build the fires. The spacious lawns were lighted and decorated with Japanese lanterns. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Charles Barrett and children, Mr. and Mrs. Burrier, Mrs. J. C. Close and children, Mrs. Ferrell, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Freshwater, Mrs. D. J. Hauger and children, Mrs. O. Hood, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Huseman, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Knecht, Mr. and Mrs. Edward McPherson, Mr. and Mrs. Kinsie Neff, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Preist, Mr. and Mrs. George Reamer, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Shrum, Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Spenser, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Schults, Mrs. Edward Volz and son, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Voltz, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Wagner, Mrs. A. F. Lellner. Out-of-town guests were: Miss Amy Layman and Miss Audie Layman of Defiance, and Mrs. C. W. Russell and children of Briggsdale. Mr. and Mrs. Dolder formerly lived on North Burgess avenue.

A surprise shower was given Miss Marie Krause at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dave Krause, 61 North Terrace street, by the neighbors. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hughes, Mrs. Burton Bretz, Mrs. G. Stahl, Mrs. C. J. Randall, Mrs. E. A. Mitchell, Mrs. F. C. Harper, Mrs. L. W. Johnson, Mrs. E. L. Skipper, Mrs. O. P. Johnson, Mrs. E. E. Botten, Mrs. E. R. Osborn, Mrs. William Winter, Mrs. G. W. Bretz, Mrs. S. E. Brown, Mrs. Lelia Cooley, Mrs. J. P. Johnson, Mrs. Kathryn Millikin, Mrs. C. W. Davis, Mrs. John Elsy, Mrs. John Shrum, Mrs. Margaret E Van Fossen, Mrs. Charles Onley, Mrs. O. Davis, Mrs. Fred Foester, Misses Erma Davis, Zadie Walton, Helen Stahl, Catherine Krause, Elizabeth Krupp, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Krause and host and hostess. A good time was had by all present.

Miss Krause received many beautiful and useful gifts. Music was furnished by Mrs. Walter Krause. Delightful refreshments were served and all parted wishing Miss Krause a very bright and happy future.

A GUEST.

ICE FIRM GETS SITE ON THE HILLTOP

On account of increased business on the Hilltop, the National Ice and Storage Company Monday purchased a parcel of land 40x150 feet on the north side of Broad street, immediately west of Hague avenue, from Van De Boe Hager Co., on which to erect a plant. Converse & Fulton, realtors, Citizens Bank Building, handled the deal for both parties. Bids are being taken by Bassett & Teaselt, architects, on the construction of a building to house a 50-ton electric driven ice plant on the premises.

ATTENTION, SPANISH WAR VETERANS

All veterans who served their country during the war with Spain, the China Boxing troubles or Insurrection in the Philippine Islands from 1898, to 1902, are hereby requested to get in touch with any of the names below. Veterans you will learn something to your advantage regarding your pensions, increases and duties towards the widows and orphans of our late veterans. We are going to have one of the biggest affairs ever pulled off in this good old Columbus town, this November 15th, so pull yourself together, get the other comrades and stand by one another, as we were all volunteers, and that spirit never dies, and you comrades that are not members of our camp, join us; we will help you, we must be united and that means success. Following comrades will be glad to assist you: James I. Martin, Hilltop 2802; C. W. Finley, Hilltop 3171; J. C. Morris, Ht. 508; F. L. Holycross, Hilltop 564; William Whalen, 78 South Wheatland avenue; W. L. Rausch, Hilltop 1535; J. M. Verbsky, Hilltop 653; V. T. Stanton, Hilltop 391; E. F. Sailor, 160 North Princeton avenue; Andrew Leonard, 449 West Chapel street; Alfred Chaplin, Hilltop 3291.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Moss and daughter, Dorthe and son Robert, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Caldwell, Mr. and Mrs. Hay Moss, Miss Coral Baum of Streator, Ill., Mr. and Mrs. Earl Goodchild and daughter Ellen Fay of Detroit, Mich., and Wymfeld Moss spent Sunday evening with Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Moss of 138 South Ogden avenue.

Miss Hilda Cecelia Bopeley, whose engagement to Mr. Frank Sekoll, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sekoll, of Wellsville, N. Y., was recently announced will be married on the morning of Thanksgiving Day at 8:30 in St. Aloysius' Church. The ceremony will be followed by a breakfast at the home of Mrs. Joseph Bopeley, 2213 West Broad street, mother of the bride-elect.

STOP! LOOK AND LISTEN!

At the Hillcrest Baptist Church, Sunday evening, October 15th, there will be a temperance talk given by Rev. McFarlane of that church. Special music will be rendered by the choir. The Camp Chase Union and Sullivant Avenue Union of the W. C. T. U., are especially given a welcome invitation to join with Hilltop W. C. T. U. at corner of Eldon avenue and West Broad street at 7:30 p. m., and march in a body to the church, corner of Eldon and Steele avenues. Any other members of the W. C. T. U. are cordially invited to be present. You will miss a splendid evening if you do not come. Mrs. Welch, president of Hilltop W. C. T. U., sends an urgent request that every lady on the Hilltop who are members of her Union, be present.

MRS. WELCH,
President.

Walter L. King has reopened his studio at 31 S. Ogden Ave. for the acceptance of pupils for the fall term in piano, applied harmony and theory. During the fall and winter pupils of Mr. King's will be heard in recital. For information call Hilltop 3094.

KIDS IN PANIC OVER GEESE

Public-Spirited Citizens in Effort to Solve Problem Are in Hunt for Boss Goose.

Woodlawn, Pa.—The usually quiet village of Woodlawn, a suburb of Pittsburgh, is in the throes of a goose panic.

Children on their way to the lower grades of the public school have been pursued and bitten. Parents notified Constable Jim Tanney that they would keep their boys and girls away from school until the hissing menace is removed.

Tanney ordered the geese owners to lock 'em up. They insisted that it could not be done. Arrests followed and several paid fines yesterday.

Public-spirited citizens, trying to solve the problem today, asked Tanney to buy a boss goose and put it on his pay-roll.

"If there is a boss goose in the whole United States capable of keeping this bunch of kid-eaters in subjection—I want it," said Tanney. "I'm sick and tired of pursuing them one by one."

Trout Swallowed Chipmunk.

Woodinville, Wash.—Tom Fulda, a timber cruiser, caught a rainbow trout in Tolt creek which had just swallowed a small chipmunk. The trout was about 23 inches long. It is presumed the forest animal was attempting to swim the creek when he was gobbled up by the voracious trout.

ISLAND HAS DANCING BEAR

Canoe Party Finds That Animal Is Eager to Perform for Sugar and Honey.

Victoria, B. C.—All by himself on a tiny island in Sproat lake, northern Vancouver island, lives a big black bear that dances on his hind legs at sight of man and has a craving for honey and sugar.

No one, not even Indians, lives within many miles of the island, which stands alone at the mouth of a little creek which empties into the lake. The bear has his home in solitude, with no other animals larger than squirrels to disturb or fear him.

The dancing bear was discovered by a canoe party which was making an exploration trip from one end of the lake to the other. As the canoe was turning a head jutting out from the island a man in the bow noticed a huge bear squatting on the sand only a few yards away. He raised his gun to shoot, but when the animal, instead of scampering away into the woods, stood on his haunches like a trick dog the gun was put aside and the canoe was brought closer to the shore.

The bear held his ground and wagged his head from side to side. The boatman tossed a lump of sugar in the direction of the bear and it was quickly devoured. The party landed on the beach and the big bear became so friendly that he ventured near enough to lick honey that had been spread on a paddle. The canoeists took a reel of photographs of the bear in various poses and then bade him good-by.

The Girl With Two Sweethearts

By LILLIACE M. MITCHELL

© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"If I had a chance at two men the way you have," said her chum bitterly, "it wouldn't take me long to decide to say yes to one of them—and leave the other one for some other girl."

Ellen started at her chum. "But you see, I've known both of them ever since I was a child and sometimes I think it's one and then again I think it's the other." Her blue eyes clouded for a moment and then she smiled. "But I know that I'll know—pretty soon—some way I can tell that I really love—" she paused.

"I believe that you do right now and are just—"

Ellen looked aggrieved: "Truly, I don't. But, some way I know that—"

"Bah!" interrupted her chum and slammed out of the house.

It was Saturday afternoon and Ellen began preparing for the evening. Tom always took her to dinner downtown on Saturday nights and then they usually went to a show or a concert while they were still downtown. And so on Saturday afternoons Ellen always washed her hair and manicured her nails with extra care for Tom, who, although he never said anything concerning her personal appearance, always had the air of regarding her critically as she stood in the front hallway drawing on her gloves.

She and Tom and David McGuire had all gone to school at the little red schoolhouse which lay equidistant between their three homes. Tom had gone to the city where he had made a definite success in the bond business which his uncle had founded some forty years before, while David McGuire had stayed back in Hillstown, where he worked hard on the farm all summer and slaved all winter at the little model of the potato-hiller he was trying to perfect enough to patent.

"I'm Much Interested in It."

That evening she was drawing on her white gloves under the affectionate yet critical eyes of Tom when David McGuire was announced. The men greeted each other with the friendliness that their school days warranted; yet, Ellen thought, there was a reserve on the part of each. While they stood discussing business she had a good opportunity to compare them.

Tom wore his clothes well and was entirely at ease; David, however, was plainly from the country. His clothes were store clothes and Ellen could just imagine how old Mr. Holloway had tried the coat on for David in front of the mirror that stood before the bench where new shoes were tried on. She could fairly see him slap David on the back: "Wish I could look as peart," he had probably said as he called old Mrs. Holloway to view the fit of the coat that looked "like it was made fer Davey."

It was decided mutually that they should all dine together and Ellen found as they drove uptown in the cab that Tom had ordered early in the afternoon that she still had ample occasion to look at the two men together. She thought of the two proposals, so like the men who had made them.

"I—I can't give you much now, honey—except love," David said as they had stood under a tree laden with cherry blossoms, "but some day the potato hiller will work out and then—then—" his eyes had looked far away over the hills.

Tom's proposal had come while they stood waiting for a taxicab after the theater: "I think a whole lot of you, Ellen, and with your looks and my money we'll just make the little old town hum—I can give you everything."

Everything—and nothing!

Tonight she would decide. She felt it instinctively. At dinner she said little. Tom did the ordering easily and she saw that David McGuire was delighted to be relieved of the duty. Tom was very careful about it all; there was nothing left to chance, for he asked the waiter about every item to make sure that each one was good this night. David was plainly distressed by the silverware and Ellen found that he watched her eagerly to see which should be picked up first. Between courses Tom said:

"Ever study psychology, Dave?"

David shook his head.

"I'm much interested in it," Tom went on easily. "Psychology, mental sciences, Freudian theories and all of that. I believe that a man can get on faster in the world if he knows a good deal about the workings of the minds of the men with whom he deals. Take me, for instance, when a fellow comes into the office with a bit of money to invest I can usually tell to a 't' whether he is interested in public utilities—in industrials or rails. I watch him—that's all—just watch him and see where his eyes travel. After I know that I mention different sums of money until I see, by the flicker of his eye, how much he wants to invest. Most people are rather reticent about mentioning a certain sum of money. Without knowing how much they want to put up it's hard for me to tell what suggestion to make in order for them to get the most return for their money. What's this, waiter—" he broke off impatiently and his face grew red. "I told you well done—well done, do you understand English? Look at the red blood running out of that meat!" He pointed a finger shaking with wrath toward the silver platter before him.

And Evelyn knew! It didn't make any difference about manners or money or anything else. It was disposition that counted. David was looking at the confused waiter with sorry eyes and kept telling Tom that he liked his meat rare anyhow. Ellen wondered now she ever could have faltered.

And on Sunday morning when she met her chum at church she told her: "We're going to live on the farm, on the tip of a hill, and the cherry blossoms in the spring—oh, Marie, you must come out to visit us next spring."

"And—and you're not going to marry Tom?" Amazement spread over Marie's face.

Ellen shook her blond head and her eyes grew soft. "I guess I've always loved Davey—only I didn't know it—you know I said yesterday I'd know pretty soon—I must have known right then—subconsciously," she ended, using one of the very terms that Tom liked so well as she spoke of her sweetheart, David McGuire.

FIRST LESSONS ARE LASTING

Education That Child Acquires in the Home Is Never Forgotten in After Life.

Very much of the earliest education, the most valuable and enduring, is that which is acquired in the home, through the medium of imitation. The child begins to copy the sights and sounds about him. Thus the first words are learned. During the entire period of his childhood, he imitates the languages and manners and emotions of older ones about him. If he lives among people whose language is correct and agreeable, and whose manners are pleasant, behavior gentle, and kind, he will unconsciously acquire helpful ways.

If kindness and considerations for each other are the rule in the home, these qualities will impress themselves upon the child. Good manners are a valuable asset to every person, but good manners have their origin in fine qualities of mind and heart. Men who as children heard profane language daily in the home, today use it, however well educated they may be. Untidy, shiftless, thriftless examples in the home turn out men and women stamped with these undesirable and harmful qualities. It is very clear that parents have an enormous responsibility toward the children they rear.

Not only is the child affected, but the community in which he lives, and in fact the nation, for the nation is made up of individuals. The refinement and prosperity of any nation never rises above its home life.—Emma L. Daniel in Thrift Magazine.

King Solomon's Mines.

The fascinating interest of the ancient ruins in Rhodesia, South Africa, drew the attention of archeologists of the British association during its recent meetings at Cape Town. Among these ruins the most conspicuous is the great Zimbabwe temple, which lies about 204 miles inland from the Indian ocean. The oldest of the ruined buildings are believed to date back at least to the days of King Solomon. It is thought that they were constructed by Semitic colonists, whose chief object was gold mining, and who have left indications of their worship of Baal and Ashtaroth, as described in the Bible. Experts believe that precious metal to the value of $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 must have been extracted from the gold reefs of Rhodesia in ancient times.

What Was It He Seen?

It was in the courtroom and the witness was having a tough time trying to testify because of the constant jangling of attorneys. "I seen—" began the witness and then the lawyer cut him off. The witness took a fresh breath. "I done—" he said before another legal objection destroyed his narrative in embryo. "I hollered—" he ejaculated, and a fresh storm of objectives broke loose. Finally there was a lull, and a lawyer more considerate than the rest addressed the court and said: "Your honor, may we not get along? For one, I am most anxious to ascertain what this witness seen, done and hollered."—Eldorado (Kan.) Times.

CARRY BABES 2,400 MILES

Man and Wife in Long, Weary Walk in Fruitless Search for Employment.

Rochester, Minn.—Completing a weary walk of 2,400 miles carrying two babies with them, Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Tofte of Tidewater, Ore., plodded into Rochester on what he said has been a hunt for a job. They did not find work here and Tofte, disconsolate and rather forlorn, says he will again start out with his family.

Tofte says they started from Oregon in May while he was out of a job, crossed the Cascade and the Rocky mountains and found no work. He says Mrs. Tofte sometimes fainted from exhaustion, but they stuck to the trail steadily.

"I've had some jobs along the way," said Tofte, "but it's been a tough struggle, and I don't know where it will end up. Well, let's go," he finished, speaking to his wife. He swung one of the children upon his shoulder where the lad had ridden for hundreds of miles and with Mrs. Tofte and the other child following he set out on a new hunt for work.

Cop Retires, Burns Uniform.

New York.—"Here goes all my hard luck," said Patrolman James J. Donahue of the Third Jersey City precinct as he took off his uniform, poured kerosene over it, lit it and cast the bundle into a field near the Isolation hospital where he had been stationed for the last few years. This episode marked the retirement of Donahue, after 21 years' police duty.

Dog Picks Up Dollar Bill.

Gettysburg, Pa.—William Zinkand who resides along the Lincoln highway near here, has a valuable dog which he has trained to pick up objects.

Recently as the dog was walking along the road it found a dollar bill. Picking it up the animal brought the paper money to the Zinkand residence and laid it on the porch.

PLAYS JOKE ON UNDERTAKER

Jersey Man Sentenced to Cut Grass in Library Grounds as Punishment for Hoax

Belmar, N. J.—Because he played a practical joke on an undertaker, Harry G. Sykes was sentenced by Mayor William A. Bamford to cut grass in front of the public library.

Sykes was accused of calling by telephone Russell T. Hardy, reporting a death and asking him to take care of the corpse. When Hardy found he had been made the victim of a joke, he complained to the mayor.

Helpful Hints for Hilltop Homes

The publisher has decided to devote a column of helpful suggestions for the home to the readers of the Hilltop Record, and sincerely solicits assistance from anyone who will kindly contribute to the same on any economic, civic, religious or domestic subject. These contributions should be at the office not later than Monday of each week, with name and address of writer attached (name not to be published unless desired). Write plainly on one side of paper only. We reserve the right to reject or curtail any part or all of any contribution which might deem detrimental to the best interests of the paper. Mrs. Clara Ditrich will have charge of this department. Any courtesies shown her will be greatly appreciated.

Looking forward to the winter months with much concern regarding living expenses, according to predictions of business and professional men, the housewife or buyer of home supplies must needs plan along economical lines. Much expense may be eliminated by buying in such quantities as will justify a saving of the family wage.

Where possible to store supplies, and most homes of the Hilltop, at least, are provided with some storage space, the buying of vegetables in quantities sufficient to last until next year's crops might prove a very effective method in supplying the family's needs at least expense; also the buying of meats, wholesale, direct from the packers.

Many Hilltop residents possess a machine and in a very short drive from the city, farm products may be purchased much cheaper direct from the farmer than from the retailer. Nor would we wish to discourage our merchants as it is quite necessary to purchase staple goods through the markets. But, again, why not buy in quantities? The retail merchant will as gladly wait upon a customer for a box or carton of staples (canned goods, prepared in the home proving more satisfactory however) as any small amount at frequent intervals. Dry goods (if sewing be done in the home), hosiery, thread, etc., can be purchased in quantities proving a great saving.

The teaching of domestic science and manual training in our public schools can find in the home a place for practical application of knowledge thus attained.

In short a home will be a real home where parents' years of experience combine with the children's book knowledge in solving economic problems.

LITERACY HIGH IN VIRGIN ISLES

Average Attendance at Public Schools Last Year Fraction Less Than 99 Per Cent.

CHILDREN ANXIOUS TO LEARN

When Sickness Is Reported as Cause of Absence Investigation Is Made by Trained Nurses—"Playing Hookey" Unknown.

Charlotte Amelie, St. Thomas, V. I.—The Virgin islands have the nearest to 100 per cent attendance in the public schools of any state, territory or possession of the United States, according to comparative statistics from Washington.

The school year which has just opened probably will show as high a percentage of attendance as last year, which was a fraction less than 99 per cent. It is not unusual for a school to report 100 per cent attendance week after week.

There is compulsory education for all children from six to fifteen years of age. When a child is absent from school without proper excuse the parents are fined 20 cents for each day of absence. Parents are fined 10 cents for every time a scholar is tardy.

Sickness Is Investigated.

When sickness is reported as the cause of absence, school nurses investigate, and only on certificate from these school nurses is the excuse of illness recognized. Simple treatment by the nurses frequently makes it possible for a child to return to the classroom.

With this system of fines, "playing hookey" is practically unknown in the Virgin islands.

When the United States by purchase acquired the Virgin islands from Denmark in 1917, there was already a well-established public school system, and it is estimated there was less than 5 per cent illiteracy in the island. The school system, however, then extended only to the sixth grade.

More Grades Are Added.

Since then the seventh and eighth grades have been established generally, and two junior high schools have been opened, with the junior year being offered this year for the first time. In another year it is planned to establish the fourth and last year of high school study.

Children in the Virgin islands are anxious to learn, according to School Director Nase, head of the insular system, and the collecting of fines for tardiness and absence does not yield more than $10 per month. This year there are 13 school teachers from the United States giving instructions in the island schools, while all of the other teachers are Virgin islanders.

DOG SAVES LIFE OF MASTER

Had Been Severely Whipped Shortly Before for Something of Which He Was Not Guilty.

Denver, Mo.—"I hated to do it," said Elmer Rogatello, with tears in his eyes, as he stroked the large head of his faithful Regis, "and it has taught me a great lesson."

Shortly after giving a severe flogging to his hound, Elmer Rogatello, a miller, lost his footing while crossing a sluiceway and fell into the mill pond. He could not swim. The faithful beast, attracted by his cries, bleeding from the whipping, painfully leaped to the rescue and dragged his master to safety.

Rogatello had beaten his dog under the belief that the animal had killed a neighbor's lamb, and later found it to be false.

Cat and Rabbit Both.

Equinunk, Pa.—Luke Mobridge of this village has a two-month's-old kitten which is a freak of nature. Its forequarters are those of a cat, while its hindquarters are distinctly those of a cottontail rabbit. When it walks it has the gait of a feline, but when it runs its movements are those of a rabbit.

Paid $110 to Salvage Liquor From Gutter

Daniel Morgan of Columbus, O., didn't like to see liquor go to waste. When J. C. Thompson, state revenue officer, poured five gallons of "evidence" into the gutter, Morgan secured a tin cup and, sitting on the curb, he dipped up and drank some of the liquor, and then got a bucket and finally dipped the bucket full and placed it in his car. Just then Thompson came along and arrested Morgan. He was later fined $110 for illegally possessing liquor.

The Best Ever Club of the Hilltop met at the home of Mrs. George Goulding, 282 Whitethorne avenue, Friday evening, October 13th. Those present were: Mrs. Elroy Dey, president; Miss Wilfred Mott, secretary and treasurer; Mesdames John Burkett, Lena Elliott, William Jones, Don Latham, Forney Jones, A. F. Elliott, John A. Moore, D. V. Pryer and the hostess, Mrs. Goulding. An interesting letter was read from an absent member, Mrs. C. W. Walton, who was in New York City. At the close of a pleasant evening, refreshments were served. The Club adjourned to meet with Mrs. John A. Moore, 57 South Wheatland avenue, Saturday evening, October 28th, when all members are to come in Hallowe'en costumes.

The Elden Avenue Neighborhood Club had their monthly six o'clock dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Riddle, 23 Elden avenue. The evening until a late hour, was spent in games and charades. The club presented Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Seiller with a set of hammered brass book ends, as they are moving to a new home in Upper Arlington. The presentation speech was made by Rev. Prior. Mrs. Seiller responding. The Seillers will be greatly missed by the club.

Thursday evening, October 26, at the Glenwood Methodist Church the first recital of the season of the Robbins-Greiser School of Music will be given. It will be a very interesting program, as little seven-year-old Judith Ann Garrison, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Garrison of North Warren avenue, will give all the readings, some of which will be in costume. She will be assisted by the Robbins and Greiser Orchestra, Kenneth Bishop, violinist, and Mary Catherine Page, pianist. Everyone is invited and there will be no collection.

Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Petty, of Bloomington, Ind., announce the marriage October 10 of their daughter Emalene, to Mr. Carl John Setzer, of Dayton. Rev. Gilbert S. Cox, pastor of the Indianola Methodist Episcopal Church performed the ceremony at his home, 1877 Summit street. The bride has been making her home with an aunt, Mrs. R. R. Smith, 142 North Harris avenue. Mr. Setzer is associated with the Ohio inspection bureau.

Honoring Miss Marie Caroline Krause, 61 North Terrace street, whose marriage to Edwin V. Hauesisen of Hilliards, takes place Saturday, October 21, Mrs. Donald G. Lear, 109 North Eureka avenue, entertained with a miscellaneous shower Thursday.

Honoring Miss Ethel Howell, who left Monday for her home at Gallipolis, Ohio, where she will be employed at her brother's store, the Seiller girls gave a farewell party Saturday evening. Miss Howell has been employed at Seiller's for over a year, and her many friends are sorry to have her leave.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Nassano, 143 South Eureka avenue, entertained twenty guests at a dinner Sunday, honoring the former's mother, Mrs. Rose Nassano, who left Tuesday for California, where she will spend the winter.

The Misses Alice King, president of the Y. W. C. A., West High School, and sister, Helen and Lois Kyle, Girls' Work Secretary, and President of the other High School Y. W. C. A. Club, motored to Piqua, Ohio, Wednesday, to attend the Y. W. C. A. meeting.

Members of Glenwood Church, don't forget the reception for the minister and family to be given in the church on Thursday evening, October 19th. All members come and get acquainted with each other as well as the pastor.

Endicott's sturdy shoes for boys, $3 and $3.50; Endicott's shoes for men, $5.00. Chas. E. Houx.

HAVE YOU REGISTERED YET?

Only two more days, Friday and Saturday, October 20 and 21, in which to qualify for the right to cast a ballot on election day, Tuesday, November 7. It should be every voter's interest to use their vote to defeat the proposed wine and beer amendment. Especially should the mothers do some very serious thinking along that line, for if carried all that has been gained will be practically lost. Intoxicants can be sold at any store, hotel or amusement hall, and to any child of tender age. It can be dispensed promiscuously in the home, at the lodge or grill room.

Surely, women are not going to have it said that men by their vote, secured the restrictions on the sale of intoxicants, and now since we have the right of suffrage to permit the sale of the accursed stuff broadcast throughout our noble state. Rally, women to the men's support! All eyes are turned to Ohio in this campaign, so let the voters — the enemy with firm convictions and a clear conscience.

At a group meeting of the Women's Home Missionary Society at Gift Street M. E. Church on October 5, a representative from the Anti-Saloon League gave a talk on prohibition, which was both timely and interesting, appealing to the women to be ardent in their labor for the Temperance cause and urging co-operation of all Christian organizations to be alert to every detrimental influence at the coming election.

Nor should we stop at the amendment alone, but seek to elect such representatives as will encourage and enforce the law on all good measures.

Seiller's Suit Sale Starts Friday.

At the meeting of the Hilltop Chamber of Commerce Tuesday night, the offer of the Holmes Library was accepted and plans were started to establish the same on the Hilltop.

The following committee was selected to arrange affairs and plans for the establishment of the library on the Hilltop: W. L. Millikin, chairman; Rev. R. T. Stimmel, Rev. R. E. Shields, C. C. Helmbrecht, J. W. Worrel, H. G. Butler, George Matson, W. H. Orebaugh, Dr. T. R. Fletcher, Mrs. Karl T. Webber, Miss Robbins, Mrs. Woodruff, M. W. Seiller, Frank Cushing, A. F. Elliott, Dr. H. H. Whitehead, Raymond Haunts, Carl Hitsch, F. W. Postle and H. M. Gibson.

In addition to the regular appointed committee, it was voted to appoint a sub-committee of forty ladies to further assist in the project.

HIGHLAND AVE SCHOOL

This semester's honor pupils have been chosen and elected to "Excelsior," the 9-A honor society at Highland. Membership in this society is based on good scholarship, good conduct, good school spirit, and participation in general school activities. Those pupils are chosen who are considered to have shown the highest degrees of these qualities. Those elected this semester are: Lucille Roothe, Bernard Brown, Marvin Green, Louise Hamilton, Constant Muth, Marjorie Pendleton, and Frances Ross.

Mr. E. N. Littleton has been formally elected as assistant principal at Highland by the Board of Education. He has charge of the administration of the school.

Enrollment at Highland has risen to 739, with 553 in the Junior High School. This is the largest it has been since the school became a Junior High.

Mrs. McFarlane, wife of Rev. E. McFarlane, was operated on Tuesday at Mt. Carmel Hospital for appendicitis. Reports are that she is getting along very well. This is the third time she has been in the hospital.

The Needle Art Club held their regular meeting at the home of Mrs. Colburn, on 304 Midland avenue, October 12th. The afternoon was spent in sewing with a short program. Several interesting talks were given. Mrs. Jessie Hamilton gave a piano solo. Mrs. McLaughlin sang a beautiful solo. The hostess served very dainty refreshments, after which time Mrs. Mann and Mrs. Dildine took the bunch to the Home Beautiful.

LENGTHY GLIDER FLIGHTS NEAR

German Designer Declares Motorless Planes Will Be Able to Climb to 20,000 Feet.

MUST KNOW AIR CURRENTS

Night Flying Is Impossible With Gliders Because All Air Currents Are Downward at Night—Hawks Fly Days Only.

Cleveland.—A motorless airplane, capable of climbing to an altitude of 20,000 feet, is forecast by Dr. George H. Madelung, designer of the successful Hanover glider, which, in a recent glider competition in the Rhone valley, broke all records by staying in the air for more than three hours.

Doctor Madelung is now a member of the designing staff of a local airplane company. Describing the phenomenal development of the machine in Germany, he explained its operation.

The machine has a gliding angle of sixteen to one, that is, in still air it glides 16 feet to every foot it descends. It has a still air speed of 20 miles an hour. If the wind is 20 miles an hour, the glider remains stationary and if more than that, it goes backwards, but if the air current is upward, the glider ascends. It is upon upward currents of air that the glider places main dependence for keeping aloft for more than brief periods.

Must Know Air Currents.

In sailing for a considerable distance the glider pilot must know approximately where he will encounter upward currents. Plowed fields and other open spaces, where the heat of the sun creates a considerable up current, are favorable places. It is for this reason that the charting of air currents has become necessary for the commercial development of the glider.

When the places along a certain route where air current may be encountered become known, flights of hundreds of miles and ascents of more than four miles may be accomplished, Doctor Madelung said.

He pointed to the hawk and other soaring birds as an illustration. The hawk will sail down to a field whence it will circle in ascent, forced upward by the rising air caused by the reflected heat of the field. When it has reached a sufficient altitude it soars away, to repeat the process miles away.

Hawks Fly Days Only.

In this connection, Doctor Madelung commented that the hawks and other soaring birds do not fly at night, stating that the reason is because all air currents are downward at night. Night flying is impossible with gliders for the same reason, Doctor Madelung said.

With the application of the principles discovered in gliding a new type of airplane, far more efficient and safe than the present types, will result, Doctor Madelung believes. Doctor Madelung's designs are being used extensively in the construction here of a new type of seaplane. It will have a wing design similar to that of the Hanover glider to be used by the United States navy.

Doctor Madelung was assistant engineer before the war in the German Institute of Aeronautical Research at Aldershoff. He was called to the front as a pilot, but was later recalled to Aldershoff.

WITCH DUCKING IS REVIVED

Girls Who Appear Too Attractive on Coast Bathing Beach Are Accused of "Witchery."

San Francisco.—Residents of the fashionable district stretching from San Mateo to Palo Alto have revived the practice of ducking "witches," according to Miss Wimmer Bonner, peninsula debutante, who claims that her chum, Miss Grace Rebele, was "ducked" in the swimming pool at Palo Alto for "witchery," and that she was criticised by Miss Margaret Johnson, swimming instructor, for wearing a one-piece bathing suit.

Miss Rebele's "witchery," according to Miss Bonner, consisted in looking too attractive at the Palo Alto pool, while her own suit, Miss Bonner avers, was described as "immodest," "diaphanous" and "indecent" by the swimming instructor.

A crowd of young men, the narrative says, first ducked Miss Rebele, who could not swim, and then attempted to duck Miss Bonner, but she swam away.

TABBY CAT WHIPS ALLIGATOR

Battles for Life of Her Kittens and Her Methods of Warfare Are Too Much for Saurian.

Cincinnati.—Mother love and methods of warfare which dazed the larger of two combatants won against terrible odds recently when a mother cat battled with an alligator which threatened her new-born kittens. The saurian dragged his five-foot length upon the porch of W. F. Madden, where "Snookums," the trusted family mouser, was basking in the sun with her five tiny kittens.

"Snookums" uttered a warning hiss, but the 'gator ignored her and started sliding across the floor toward the fluffy kittens. The mother cat launched herself through the air and landed on the beast's back, where she proceeded to slice his tough hide with her claws.

Her howls and the din that ensued brought Mrs. Madden to the scene, and a bewildered and bleeding alligator was hustled into a cellar prison.

Mixed Copperhead Snakes With Lumbering Operations

When a saw cut into a log at the McDonald sawmill, near Sloats, Ind., a nest of copperhead snakes was found and threatened for a time to put a stop to operations at the mill. Several slabs had been taken off by the saw when the snake nest was penetrated. In an instant the saw carriage and mill was a mass of squirming snakes. The lumbermen attacked the snakes with log hooks and killed all the reptiles.

Some One Some Day

By A. W. PEACH

© 1913, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

Irma raced from the gate to the vine-clad porch where her invalid mother was busy with her knitting.

"Mother, what do you think? Uncle Ben did remember us. Here's a letter from his lawyers, saying that he left us $50,000 in cash, that the money had been forwarded to our local bank, and —well—now—"

Her mother laughed at the long sigh that followed the "now." "Now, Dark Eyes, I suppose you will want to be doing missionary work with it. Ben never liked us, but I guess he thought better of his family as he grew older. What are you going to do with it?"

Irma looked into her mother's twinkling eyes. "Well, with this and what father left us, I guess we won't worry any more; and then—and then—mother dear, I'm going to give Mrs. Jamieson enough to have Bobby operated on, and I'm going to buy that home for old Mr. and Mrs. Peebles, and—"

"Gracious, child, get your breath! I hope you will do happy things with what we don't need, and our needs are not luxurious. We—here comes Del Stewart!" Her mother added, looking up the walk.

Irma went to meet him, a little of the happiness of her plans going from her face. Stewart was a persistent lover almost to the point of being annoying; but he was regarded in the village as a good catch for any girl, and the village had been unable to understand why Irma had not accepted him. As a matter of fact, she had been on the verge of doing so, but always the realization that she did not love him as she wanted to love some one some day held her back.

She told him the good news, but he did not seem in any sense overjoyed

"Mother, What Do You Think?"

by the information. She guessed the reason. The son of the richest family in the village, he had made her realize what he could do for her and her mother. In dark moments that thought had tempted her—but only for moments.

"I suppose that means you will stay an old maid all your life," he said bluntly.

"There are worse things," she said quietly.

"Are you implying that being my wife might be worse?" he demanded.

"Oh, Del, why be so suspicious and quick tempered? No, I did not mean that. As I have told you so many times, I like you, but don't love you and there is a whole world of difference between the two."

He left her in a huff shortly after, but her discomfort at his attitude was relieved by the thought of the good she could do with the money she and her mother did not actually need. She would make a few dreams come true.

The next week she proceeded to do so. Mr. Peebles, limping home from work, found the deed of his home waiting for him in his wife's trembling hands. The old people wept softly in each other's arms, and then went slowly down the street together to the Raines cottage. The little Jamieson boy, his pale face alight with hope that he was going to be made like other boys, went with his mother to the great city. Quietly, here and there, Irma made dreams come true; happy-hearted, she planned for others and carried the plans through.

Then out of the clear sky came the word that left her almost fainting—a letter from the western firm of lawyers telling her to cease drawing on the $50,000, that a later will had been discovered in which the money had been left to Mr. Blair Kingston, a friend of her uncle; that a representative would see her about the matter.

She was at her wits' end. "What shall I do? What shall I do?" was the bitter question she faced. She had spent the money for things that could not be returned. She might take the little money in her mother's name—and that would mean poverty for them.

In desperation she told Stewart. He smiled. "Marry me, Irma, and I'll take care of the whole thing," was his solution.

She looked at him with frightened eyes, and started to offer herself, for the gateway he mentioned seemed the only one. Just as his greedy eyes were growing triumphant, the doorbell rang and Irma had to go.

At the door she found a tall, clean-cut figure, and looked up into gray, pleasant eyes. She guessed who he was. "You are from Stetson & Stetson?" she asked fearfully.

He nodded. "Yes, I am here to explain the situation and arrange for the return of the money. It is very unfortunate."

Stewart was forgotten as, her mind in a whirl, Irma led the tall lawyer into the cottage living room and began the terrible explanation.

He listened quietly, then said: "I would like to see Mr. Peebles' home and the Jamieson lad—in fact, just what you have done."

He came the next day and she did as he requested. The day drew into a week. Evenings found him at the little cottage, a part of the little circle of home life. Under the quiet friendliness of his ways Irma almost forgot the tragic import of his errand. Then came the evening he announced his departure. That night in the quiet of her room Irma saw with a soul's clear vision that in him she had found the some one she could love some day. But tomorrow he would come, tomorrow he would suggest some arrangement for the return of the money she had used. Very quietly she came to her decision to marry Del Stewart.

The next afternoon the attorney came. He asked her to walk with him in the old-fashioned garden her mother loved. In the summer house he paused and took her hands. She looked up into his fine gray eyes—to start and tremble at what she saw there—something that sent a wild cry through her heart—"He loves me!"

"Irma, confession and apology shall come. First, however, let me say not a penny need be returned. You have used the money too beautifully. Second, I am a lawyer, but not a member of the Stetson firm. I am Starr Kingston. Last of all, I love you."

The next thing she knew she had evidence that it was no longer a matter of some one or some day.

WEAKEST GO "TO THE WALL"

Where Nature Is Most Prolific With Life, Only the Most Fitting Are Able to Survive.

Life is lavishly abundant on the seashore, writes Leo Walmsley in a London paper.

From high-water mark to low you will find not a square foot of rock, sand or mud unpopulated. One hundred animals to the square yard, or 300,000,000 to the square mile, is but a modest census. I know rocks which support four animals to the square inch or more than 15,000 millions to the square mile!

For this reason the struggle for existence is intense and unceasing. Not one animal is there whose life history is not one continuous fight against death or to cause death to some other animal.

"Making room" on the seashore is a problem economically solved. If you are a seashore animal and there is not sufficient seashore to supply you with food and the necessities of life, you either kill and eat your neighbors or your neighbors kindly do the same to you. The system is primitive but sound.

It follows that all seashore animals must be well-trained soldiers. We find that their methods of warfare are not dissimilar from our own.

Take, for example, the limpet, a soft-bodied snail. It is a plant eater; so, from the military point of view, its chief concern is defense. Among its enemies must be reckoned sea birds, big fish, crabs, dog-whelks. Its stout, tent-shaped shell is specially evolved to resist the attacks of all these. It is actually a fort—a tank, in fact, for it can move.

But no fort or tank designed by man or beast is impregnable. Often the hard shells of limpets are drilled by dog-whelks, often they are "rushed" by shore crabs.

Insects Tell of Coming Storms.

When a flock of "alguaciles" fly into your office on a hot summer day in Buenos Aires you know that the "pampero" and a welcome drop in temperature are coming.

The "alguaci" is a South American insect which resembles the North American "darning needle" and the word in Spanish also means "constable." He lives up to his name by watching the rise of the prairie storms known as pamperos that sweep down on Buenos Aires from the pampas, and when he sees one coming flies into the city 100,000 strong to warn the inhabitants.

MINING OF DIAMONDS

Methods Are Interestingly Described by Geographic Society.

Precious Little Lumps Are Imbedded in Great Volume of Worthless Rock—Engineers Solve Difficult Problem.

Washington, D. C.—A "rush" such as frontier America knew in its free-land days, but in this case to peg out claims in a newly discovered diamond field was mentioned in recent dispatches from South Africa. This new diamond country opens up possibilities of a rival to the great Kimberly diamond field in the same general region, the world's greatest source of the sparkling white [illegible].

The methods of mining diamonds at Kimberly, which may be followed in the new fields if the formation proves the same, are outlined in a bulletin from the Washington, D. C., headquarters of the National Geographic society.

"The mines at Kimberly," says the bulletin, "are in very ancient volcanoes which ages ago lost all semblance of activity. But during their youth the great heat and pressure of these volcanoes created gigantic laboratories in their depths in which thousands of the hard white carbon crystals, which are diamonds, were created. The precious little lumps are embedded in a great volume of worthless rock known as 'blue ground,' and under old conditions were as hard to find as the proverbial needle in a haystack. But just as a clever searcher could probably locate his needle with a powerful magnet, despite the straw, so engineers have evolved mechanical means cleverly to separate the few tiny diamonds from the many tons of dirt in which they are hidden.

"The effectiveness with which Nature has concealed the crystals is evidenced by the fact that the 'blue ground' brought up from the depths of the mines and carrying its priceless gems, is spread out in the open for four months to a year to the weather. The diamonds are perfectly safe. Mine officials who have walked over the weathering 'floors' for many years assert that they have never found a diamond in this way. As the 'blue ground' weathers it crumbles, and great harrows like those used on the bonanza farms of the West are dragged over it to facilitate the process.

"Eventually the material is broken down into relatively fine particles. It is then taken in truck-loads to the mechanical plant of the mine for treatment. The ground is mixed with water in great mixing machines and passed over screens of fine wire meshing.

"When as much as possible of the foreign material has been removed in this way the coarse residue, containing the diamonds, is passed over sloping, vibrating tables covered with thick grease. Because of some little understood physical property, diamonds stick to the grease while the worthless material flows over the edge of the tables. The grease with its load of crystals is then scraped into a perforated container and heated by steam. The grease melts away and leaves the small but highly valuable objects of these months of work."

HIDE BOOZE IN FURS

Liquor Leaves British Columbia Ostensibly for Mexico.

Bootleggers Take Advantage of Exceptionally Heavy Shipments of Furs to Eastern Points—Ruse Is Discovered.

Victoria.—British Columbia has experienced bootlegging in its original and best known form and also so-called bootlegging in furs, but now there appears to be a combination of the two, and officials of the provincial liquor board are disturbed by reports intimating that bonded liquor, carefully packed in pelts, is being shipped to dry Ontario in the guise of local fur shipments.

Shipment of furs to eastern points has been exceptionally heavy lately, and this fact links up with the thread of the story unfolded by those who have been investigating British Columbia's latest liquor scandal.

The story also fits in with the mystery of the liquor-laden schooners which leave British Columbia ports for Mexico and other distant countries and never seem to find their destination. Briefly, this is the belief of the investigators:

In the first place, it is quite legal to purchase liquor in British Columbia as long as the government sells it. It is also legal to export liquor from British Columbia, and lately large quantities have been sent out ostensibly to Mexico in bond on the understanding that duty would be paid on arrival in Mexico. The liquor, however, seldom reaches that destination, and one good reason is that Mexico could probably import liquor from other countries a good deal cheaper than she could from British Columbia, which must import most of its hard stuff from distant points anyway.

Apparently the liquor ships, after once getting out to sea, head northward again and their cargo eventually reaches a British Columbia port such as Prince Rup- The cargo being in bond is not disturbed except by the agents of the "ring." Furs are wrapped around the liquor, and when the job is completed the bundles are such as to pass the eye of the most zealous railway official as just so much furs, labeled for some eastern city, usually Toronto.

The ruse was discovered when one of the shipments was held up on account of overweight and reclassified when the shipper protested. The liquor was found hidden in the furs.

EFFICIENCY FOR THE HEN

It is of little profit for a hen to sit patiently for three weeks on a nest full of eggs—unless the eggs are fertile. Here's the way to make sure the eggs are fertile—hold the egg to the opaque metal chimney of the lamp—the powerful light will show the dark embryo, if the egg be fertile.

Valuable Diamond Pin Found Inside Chicken

A diamond pin, said to be worth $400, was found in a chicken which Mrs. Michael Kelly of Philadelphia was preparing for dinner. The fowl was purchased from a butcher.

Mrs. Kelly at first thought the pin of no value, but an expert pronounced the stone a diamond of fine quality.

"AND THE CAT CAME BACK"

"Sammy," Who Vanished From South Dakota University, Turns Up in Old Indiana Home.

Vermillion, S. D.—The intelligence of "Sammy," a large black male cat, is vouched for by Dean and Mrs. Frank T. Stockton of the University of South Dakota, who, upon returning from the summer vacation, made known the unusual qualities of their pet.

As Dean Stockton tells the story, Mrs. Stockton formerly lived in Williamsport, Ind., and "Sammy's" young tomhood was passed in that town. When she married they came to South Dakota's state university and brought "Sammy." He passed nearly four years there and then in March, 1921, disappeared.

The Stocktons recently visited Williamsport. In passing her old home, Mrs. Stockton saw a black cat on the fence. She called "Sammy!" Sammy answered. Careful scrutiny proved his identity—scowed-up ear and scars where they should be. He had returned, residents said, and, finding strangers, for a long time refused to enter the home, but remained about the place.

Sammy returned to Vermillion.

On October 21, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. David Krause, North Terrace street, their daughter, Miss Marie Caroline Krause, was married to Mr. Edward V. Haueisen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Haueisen, of Hilliards. The ceremony was performed at St. Matthew's Evangelical Lutheran Church, at eight o'clock in the evening by the pastor, Rev. W. M. Harley. The bride was in a gown of white georgette with lace trimmings, and wore a tulle veil held with a band of pearls and orange blossoms. She carried a shower of roses and swansonia. Miss Esther Haueisen, the bridegroom's sister, as maid of honor, was in the turquoise blue georgette and her flowers were Ophelia roses. Mr. George Pershert was best man. Fifty relatives and friends witnessed the marriage. After November 1st, the couple will be at home at Hilliards.

Rev. J. W. Willis of Junction City, a minister of the United Brethren Church, officiated Tuesday evening at the marriage of Miss Ruth Ellison, daughter of Mrs. Nellie Ellison, 428 Powell avenue, to Mr. Orville De Priest, 864 South High street. A large company of guests witnessed the ceremony. Mr. Earl Ellison, brother of the bride, sang "With You" by Godfrey Nutting. Mrs. Bertha Price played the wedding music using the Bridal Chorus from Lohengrin for the processional. Miss Mary Flohr attended the bride as maid of honor and Mr. Homer De Priest was best man for his brother. Bertha Jean Ellison, niece of the bride, was flower girl and Edwin Homer Ellison, her nephew, carried the ring. The bride was crowned in a long draped model of white satin crepe with girdle of pearls and garnitures of the same. Her tulle veil was gathered into a wreath of orange blossoms and she carried a bouquet of brides' roses with shower of lilies of the valley. Miss Flohr wore Spanish lace in orchid color, draped over a foundation of orchid satin. The little flower girl had a white organdie frock with sash of orchid taffeta and carried an orchid basket filled with pink and white blossoms. The ring bearer was in dark blue velvet. Out-of-town guests included Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Kirkpatrick, Cherry Fork; Dr. and Mrs. S. J. Ellison, West Union; Miss Mildred Ferguson, Bellaire; Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Diehl and son, Floyd Arthur, of Hamilton; Dr. and Mrs. John Brown of Springfield; Miss Geneva Ellison of Granville. Mr. and Mrs. De Priest will make their home at 75 South Hague avenue, after November 1.

The Eureka Chapter of the Westminster Guild will present "The Pill Bottle" at Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church on Friday evening, November third at eight o'clock. Silver offering.

On October 20th, the Crego Guild Class of Glenwood Sunday School met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Compton of 342 Clarendon avenue for an all-day meeting. There were twenty members present. The hostess very kindly presented the class with pieced blocks for a quilt, which the ladies joined together, the rest sewed carpet rags. At the noon hour we were bountifully served to a delicious luncheon to which all did ample justice. After noon all resumed their work, and with pleasant social chatting, the hours soon passed away.

Relatives and friends of Grandma Whitehead met at her home, 121 Clarendon avenue, Monday, October 23rd, in celebration of her 88th birthday. A fine dinner was served. The beautiful birthday cake which graced the center of the table, was made by Mrs. H. P. Whitehead of 84 Chittenden avenue. Many messages were received from friends and distant relatives expressing their love and respect and wishing her many returns of the day. There were nineteen present.

Mrs. Amos O. Dyer entertained in honor of her pupils at her home at 148 South Eureka avenue, on Saturday afternoon. The decorations were confined to the reception hall, and after all had assembled, the shades were drawn and the lights turned on, and the entertainment was a happy blending of musical games and Hallowe'en stunts. One corner of the living room was converted into a Gypsy camp and was presided over by Miss Sylvia Dyer, dressed in Indian costume, with just a few (?) beads, and Mrs. Maude Jewell of Boston, Mass., a guest and friend of the hostess, in a pleasing Nomad costume, foretold by the light of her campfire, some wonderful futures, most highly colored and filled with fairy princes, princesses, castles, jewels, fame, fortune and a very great deal of happiness, much to the amusement of the guests, who were cautioned to keep secret all she had foretold, as otherwise nothing would come true. The guests had been provided with artificial bank-notes of various denominations, to enable them to cross the Gypsy's palm with money, and to gain admission to the den of His Infernal Majesty. Boston baked beans with brown bread, assorted cakes and ice cream were served, the smallest guests all being seated at one table, formed a merry group. Several pupils were unable to attend. The guests were: Misses Martha Waymer, Esther Downs, Mary Mider, Elizabeth Streets, Geraldine Adams, Doris Ault, Ruth Dixon, Gertrude Steinhaur, Faye King, Alice Smith, Margaret Combs, Masters Elmer Dauben, Herman Stine, Mesdames Elvina Downs, Lida Ault, Maude Jewell, and others.

The marriage of Robert Clark Ireland, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank P. Ireland, 33 South Hague avenue, to Miss Clara Bambach, daughter of Mr. George G. Bambach, of Miami, Fla., formerly of 1093 Summit street, was solemnized Wednesday, October 18, at 2 p. m. in the parlors of Indianola Church. Rev. Gilbert Cox officiating. On Friday evening Mrs. L. N. Earle and Mrs. F. P. Ireland entertained with dinner at the former's home, 324 North Burgess avenue, honoring Mr. and Mrs. Ireland. Twenty-five guests were present.

Black cats, witches and pumpkin faces greeted the Beta Lambda Class of Glenwood Sunday School as they arrived at the home of Mrs. Lawrence N. Earle, 324 North Burgess avenue. Many clever and ridiculous characters were represented. Clowns predominated with several old-fashioned ladies; one very handsome man mike and his bride, Rastus and his gal, Miss Susanna, Foxy Grandpa, a fisherman, the sunbonnet twins, a death head, some ghosts, one a terrible groaning one, red cross nurses, an immigrant, a State student, several little girls, one not so little, and the japama twins. Guessing who represented the different characters and pinning the eyes in a large pumpkin face provided the amusement for the evening.

This being the annual election of officers, the following were elected: Mrs. M. W. Seiller, president; Mrs. C. W. Walton, first vice president; Mrs. B. J. Dildine, secretary of class; Mrs. A. V. Allen, treasurer; Mrs. L. N. Earle, press reporter; Mrs. C. F. Prior, teacher; Mrs. M. W. Lage and Mrs. H. W. Large, assistant teachers; Mesdames Elliott, Hall, Wm. Jones Gatton and Ireland assistant hostesses; Mrs. Eugene Dupres, social secretary.

Stephen P. Mayer, 65, barber, died from complications Monday at his home, 157 South Eureka avenue. He had been ill for three years. He leaves a widow, Mrs. Ada Mayer; one son, Frank Mayer of Columbus; three daughters, Mrs. Florence Graham and Mrs. Bertha Payne of Columbus, and Mrs. Glenna Lasher of Detroit. He was a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. Funeral at 2 p. m. Wednesday from the residence. Burial in Green Lawn.

At Glenwood Church on Friday, October 27th, the first supper of the season will be given by the Woman's Home Missionary Society. After supper there will be an exhibition of missionary work upstairs. Tickets, including both, 35c.

List your Hilltop property with Barnes Bros., 118 N. Burgess. Hilltop 346. 2442 or 4329.

Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Silver and son, Norman, of Marion, Ohio, were weekend guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Fullmer, 362 South Harris avenue.

A Hallowe'en party was given by Miss Agnes Winget at her home, 71 North Warren avenue, on last Friday evening. A good time was had by all. Those present were: Mary Rinehart, Margaret Otto, Hilda Woerner, Margaret Alspach, Edith Boyer, Ruth Beckett, Louise Cooley, Sylvia Dyer, Ruth Pringle, Virginia Anderson, Ruth Dixon, Cleo Kellar, Earl Boome, David Matson, Carl Johnson, Herbert Ault, Burd Miller, Herbert Cramer, Devello Morris, Donald McColly, Robert Bradfute, Roy Allen, Donald Mitchell, Richard Todhunter, and the hostess.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Jester and little daughter, 393 North Warren avenue, recently motored to Stroudsburg, Pa., for a two weeks' visit with relatives. They stopped at Wheeling, Cumberland, Harrisburg and other points en route. Distance traveled about 1500 miles, through fruit regions and over mountain peaks, the highest being 2880 feet. They found the roads in fine condition, with very few detours, having only one puncture on the entire distance.

The October meeting of the Glenwood Home Missionary, which met with Mrs. Jennie Smith, 2402½ West Broad street, was well attended and an interesting program was given. Mesdames Stimmel and Swigert reviewed the first chapter of the new text books. Mrs. Bishop read a letter and Mrs. Legg had charge of the devotional service. The business meeting followed. The Society is planning for their supply work for the year. The first supper of the season will be given by the Home Society in the chuch Friday evening, October 27th, from 5:30 to 8:30. The supper together with an exhibition of missionary work, will be given for 35 cents.

Columbus Day, October 12th, was very fittingly observed at West Broad Street School when the new flag was raised on the front lawn. The guard of honor chosen for the occasion, was four 6-A pupils, Staley Shanely, Ralph Hill, Ruth Dell and Enid Sampson. The guard of honor is chosen from the honor roll pupils and will raise the flag at the opening of school each morning and lower it at the close of school each day. A guard of honor will be chosen from the honor roll of each of the upper grades; any pupil standing E in habits of study and no grade lower than G, is placed in the honor roll.

The guard of honor for this week is: Paul Kent, Howard Kent, Donns Harmon and Agnes Gatten.

Over 450 pupils have left West Broad Street School since in June, 1921, and the registration is now 650 and still growing.

An entertainment consisting of stereopticon views, lecture and music was given at West Broad Street School on Friday evening under the auspices of the Parent-Teachers' Association for the benefit of the Hilltop Library. It was a small but very appreciative audience. There are many parents in the district who do not belong to the Association; won't you please join and give us your support for the welfare of your child?

HISTORY OF TROOP 45, BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

This troop, known as Troop 45, B. S. of A., was organized in Glenwood M. E. Church in 1917. It was like a canoe on rocky shore when Troop 33 gave us a helping hand. In 1919 we again took out a charter on our own "nook," "Dick" Lewis acting as Scoutmaster. In a few months he moved out of town, dropping the work on the shoulders of J. Dana Marsh, who was acting as an Assistant Scoutmaster, Rev. Bowman registered as Scoutmaster, but was a very busy man and could give very little time to the work. October, 1921, Mr. Marsh registered as Scoutmaster; Chas. Page as assistant. Our troop committee being Messrs. Shonting, Roller and Sherwood. The first scout to reach second class was Ralph Moore, in June of 1920. The first First Class Scout was Oscar Nader, who passed finals in June, 1921, followed by Walter Kidd in February, 1921. The standing of the troop is as follows:

Walter Kidd was our first Life and Star Scout and was presented with the senior patrol leaders' body September 25, 1922. During the absence of Charles Page, who was a tent leader at Camp Burroughs in 1922, Ed. Zenker, Assistant Scoutmaster of Troop 21, came and took charge and is still keeping up with "good turns." There are at present approximately fifty merit badges in our troop and more to come. We will soon be in our new home in the rear of 28 North Burgess avenue. You are all invited to visit us. Watch us grow. Frank Himebrook, Scribe.

Endicott's sturdy shoes for boys, $3 and $3.50; Endicott's shoes for men, $5.00. Chas. E. Houx.

Mrs. Margaret Shepler of Steubenville, Ohio, spent a few days last week with her cousins, Flora V. Kyle and brother at 28 South Oakley avenue.

Church Doings

GLENWOOD METHODIST

Next Sunday morning the pastor's subject will be: "The Power of an Awakened Church."

AMERICA HAS NO NATIONAL FLOWER

No Blossom Ever Has Been Selected as the Symbol of the United States.

HUMBLE DAISY IS PROPOSED

Bill in Congress Would Raise the Daisy to Official Post of National Flower —Columbine and Mayflower Suggested

Washington, D. C.—An important defect in the structure of American civilization has been brought to public notice again. This great nation, so complete in most respects, has no national flower.

There is no blossom that the political candidate can stick in his buttonhole to show that he is a patriot and to which he can point with pride as the living symbol of his high ideals. There is no flower that can be carved into public buildings about Washington to remind the government worker of some inspiring tradition.

When the President chooses a flower for his coat or his wife selects a decoration for a state dinner, they must ponder the entire list of flowers in the White House conservatories. No national blossom comes instantly to mind as the emblem which fittingly represents the nation. This catalogue could go on indefinitely. The nation simply has no national flower.

Generally such things are arranged for a country through accident. Some gallant leader takes to wearing into battle the flower beloved by his lady and his cohorts follow suit. Eventually the nation is saved by the hero and he attributes everything to the charm of the flower. Popular sentiment is aroused. The story of the flower that saved the country becomes tradition. Gradually it becomes the national flower without any argument.

England acquired the rose as its national flower through a series of romantic instances each of which deepened the significance of the flower. The thistle really saved Scotland when a moat filled with thistles prevented the enemy from reaching an important fortress.

American Heroes Neglectful.

But early American heroes were strangely neglectful of this matter. They spent much time planning a suitable seal and flag. But they never bothered to snatch up a sprig of goldenrod or snapdragon when they went out to fight, and their great-great-grandchildren are suffering today as a result.

In the recent war when the scarlet Flanders poppy became so poignant a symbol of America's sacrifice the national flower seemed about to appear. But the beautiful poppy, it was explained by horticultural experts, was a weed in France and to introduce it into the gardens of this country would be a mistake. So the poppy remains only a memory except for the artificial specimens that occasionally bloom on national holidays.

Now, Representative Kissel of New York has introduced a bill in congress which would raise the humble daisy to the official post of the national flower. Representative Kissel's bill has aroused a number of inquiries, and expressions of protest and approval.

Some people think that the national flower should not be a common weed but a blossom that can be cultivated and cherished. They want something handsome that will do the nation credit. Others applaud the sweet simplicity of the daisy, but believe that we should choose a flower that is more capable of historic association. Others read into the daisy a fitting symbolism for national use. The heart of gold the whiteness of pure ideals, the green stalk suggesting fruitfulness of earth are pointed out.

It seems to be especially important to link up a complete set of associations with a national flower if it is to be arbitrarily legislated into existence. The columbine, for instance, which was persistently pushed in a hot race for the national flower some years ago, is said to be deeply significant.

Moreover, the columbine grows wild over the greater part of the country, and blooms in adverse circumstances. It grows in a variety of colors, among them red, white, and blue.

Mayflower Suggested.

The mayflower has since had quite a following, particularly in the East. This was the first flower that greeted the Pilgrims after their hard winter in Plymouth. Unfortunately, however, it is a blossom of our eastern coast, and is scarcely known to other sections of the country.

Goldenrod, which has many supporters, also arouses opposition. It was suggested because of the association with gold, America being the traditional land of gold. But goldenrod has a bad reputation as a hay fever agent, and it would probably make a great many people miserable if it were to be widely used as the national flower.

The pansy seems a strange flower to be proposed for our national emblem. Yet in 1892 two bills were introduced to that effect. Deciding upon a national flower by legislation seems impossible. The old spontaneous way of acquiring one is undoubtedly the most natural, and perhaps it is not too late for America to follow the rules even now.

Accidents Will Happen

By CLARISSA MACKIE

© 1913, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate

Lucie gave one last defiant glance at her charming reflection in the cheval glass, turned gravely and went to her mother's room.

"Here I am, mother," she said quietly.

Mrs. Delmore, recovering from a badly sprained ankle, leaned forward on her couch. Her fine eyes were sad. In silence she regarded her lovely daughter, marked the lack of gayety, the white look about her pink lips, and decided that pale primrose was not quite becoming.

"You are lovely, darling," she said.

"I know what you are thinking, mother dear (Lucie ran forward and fell beside the couch, her eyes hidden against her mother's white hair), "you are thinking that instead of being Eleanor's bridesmaid I should be wearing white and should be marrying—" Her voice shook.

"Not Colonel Happie—he's quite too old for Eleanor!"

The interruption had the desired effect. "No," laughed Lucie, hugging her mother, "but I did think you were grieving over my broken engagement. I am sure it is for the best and that Paul and I never could be happy together. I believe I hear the car; I must go!" She kissed her mother passionately, paused laughingly for one more brief inspection and vanished from the quiet room.

"She cares! She cares!" murmured Mrs. Delmore regretfully, thinking of the two proud young hearts steeled against each other.

* * * * * * *

Eleanor Gray's mercenary marriage to Colonel Happie, who was years older than the sparkling young bride, had been arranged by an ambitious mother.

"We Are Gathered——."

It was to be a splendid affair, taking place in a large, fashionable church. Lucie Delmore was one of the eight pretty bridesmaids who were to form part of the brilliant wedding party.

It was ten minutes past the hour set for the wedding when word went around that the bride was coming. The organ was playing softly, the guests settled themselves in their seats and prepared to look at the most-talked-about marriage of the season.

Eleanor had rehearsed them all the night before. The colonel and his best man would wait at the altar, the bridesmaids would go forward on the arms of various ushers and they would form a lane through which Eleanor and her father would pass to meet the bridegroom. The colonel's first marriage had been a military wedding, but this was to be without martial trappings.

Lucie Delmore waited pensively as the procession formed; then it was a shock to discover that she must walk up the aisle escorted by Paul Dare. After that her thoughts were chaotic. The slow, beautiful music, the soft rustle of satin frocks, the scent of yellow roses—then a sudden, frightened knowledge that something had gone wrong. Lucie and Paul had been the last of the procession of bridesmaids. Behind them should have been flower girls and a maid of honor, a bride and her father.

A faint murmur arose somewhere and was stilled. A hushed whisper went over the assembled guests. Some one hurried up to Paul and murmured discreetly—the murmur was passed on. The organ went on playing the wedding march, the clergyman in his white robes waited at the altar.

Lucie stole a troubled glance over her shoulder.

The aisle behind them was empty. Beyond the doors there was an excited buzzing of voices—the rest of the wedding party still delayed. Had some accident happened to the bride?

The dapper young man who had whispered to Paul Dare tiptoed up a side aisle and whispered to Col. Happie. The colonel turned very red, and, followed by the best man, retreated to the vestry. The rector bent his head to listen to the message, looked flustered, hesitated and lifted his hand.

The music stopped, and as in a dream Lucie heard the rector's voice announcing that the marriage would not take place that day. She saw the dapper youth whispering to Paul again and saw him dart up the aisle once more. It was confusing and she could not look at Paul, for they were foes! What had happened to Eleanor?

Then the music began again—tender, dreamful.

To her surprise the procession moved forward. Then the couples ahead of them separated and formed a short lane through which Paul guided her, at first dazedly, then alarmed, straight to the chancel rail, where the white-robed clergyman stood looking benignly down on the most surprised bride that ever came to be united in wedlock.

"Dearly beloved, we are gathered——." The remainder was another dream from which Lucie Delmore awakened to find herself the wife of Paul Dare. After it was over there was a wild confusion of questions and answers, explanations and consternation, and finally Lucie Dare found herself driving home, while Paul's arms were around her and Paul's lips were begging forgiveness.

It was a very tearful bride and a proud and happy bridegroom who faced Mrs. Delmore in her pleasant sitting-room.

"Mother, you will never believe what has happened!" cried Lucie.

"Something very pleasant, if you and Paul have decided not to quarrel any more," smiled Lucie's mother.

"Mother," said Paul softly, and his voice lingered on the word, "Lucie and I were married this morning. Forgive us for doing it in this way, but this is how it happened: We were half way up the aisle when Smith came and told me that Eleanor had disappeared—gone off and married young Palmer. He broke the bad news to the colonel, and Dr. Deems was just going to dismiss the guests when Smith passed me and I told him my idea about taking advantage of the accident and having a wedding after all!"

Mrs. Delmore kissed them both. "I am sorry for Eleanor's mother and I pity the colonel, but I must say, my dears, that it is the only mercenary wedding I ever knew of that turned out happily!"

SETS CHECK ON DESTRUCTION

Wonderful Ways by Which Mother Nature Regulates All Things Under Her Guidance.

One of nature's greatest wonders is the way in which she sets a check on destructive insects which would otherwise overwhelm vegetation. It is no exaggeration to say that we owe the famous Demerara sugar which comes from British Guiana, to the activities of a tiny insect parasite, no bigger than a "period" in this column. The great plague of Demerara sugar fields is the moth cane-borer, which is so destructive that it would soon ruin the entire sugar crop if it had no enemies to destroy it. Fortunately, a little parasite called the trichogramma exists in the cane fields in myriads; it is so small that it can scarcely be seen, but it is the only thing which can stop the ravages of the cane borer. Where the cane borer goes the trichogramma follows, and as soon as the cane borer lays its eggs the trichogramma follows, and as soon as the cane borer lays its eggs the trichogramma finds them out and destroys them by laying its own eggs inside them. In this way the trichogramma sometimes accounts for 75 per cent of the cane borer's eggs, and the planters, who are keenly alive to its value, take the greatest care when harvesting the cane not to injure their tiny helpers.

The trichogramma also does very good work in preserving the rice and coconut crops of the West Indies, and for its size is probably the most useful creature in the world.

"Pot Luck."

When an invitation is issued to "come and take pot luck" it is understood that no special preparation is made for the invited guest. There was a time, however, when "pot luck" meant dishing the food out of a pot and when the guest really took chances of getting a good meal or a very slim one. In the old days—and the practice is still in force in some parts of Europe—nothing came amiss to the family cooking pot, suspended from the pot-hook in the middle of the fireplace. Everything edible was thrown in it, and "to keep the pot boiling" the fire was seldom or ever allowed to go out. When the meal time came everyone fished in the pot for himself, and whatever he happened to find was "pot luck."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Qualified.

In a western city, just before an election for city officers, one of the candidates, a Mr. Grow, a very fat man who aspired to be councilman from his ward, made a house-to-house canvass soliciting votes. At one place his knock brought forth a young and frisky dog, which leaped through the open door when it was opened by the lady of the house and ran the candidate off the porch and down the front walk toward the gate.

The woman at the door, knowing the dog to be harmless, called to the fleeing candidate, "What are you running for Mr. Grow?"

And Mr. Grow, with the office in his mind even in the presence of danger, called back between gasps: "Councilman of this ward, madam!"—The Argonaut.

Swift Wrote on a Pane.

Poets such as Pope and Burns and great writers such as Swift and Carlyle have not disdained to use the window pane for their rhymes.

Swift nearly always left a sting in his verse. Once, while on his way to Ireland, he called at the Four Crosses Inn (originally the Three Crosses), a few miles from Rugby. Disliking his reception by the host he wrote these lines on the window with his diamond:

"You have three crosses at your door.
Hang up your wife and you'll have four."

Helpful Hints for Hilltop Homes

HOME

When you go down the lane,
Don't forget the tumbled-down shack,
Where there were sorrows, joys and pain
Shared by all who lived within.

'Tis true the doors are gone,
And windows are without panes,
But the roses still bloom on!
As they did when all was mirth within.

The plaster has come down,
And the grate holds no flame,
The floors are still of ground,
But it's home just the same.

The chicken yard is empty,
And there is no gentle "moo"
From the barnyard in the evening,
When the milking time is due.

The garden fence is old and decayed,
The bordered paths are gone.
Where children laughed and played,
All is gone! gone! gone!

The old apple tree stands alone.
And it drops its mellow fruit,
But no childish voices ask for it;
The place is like a mute.

As yore take one last long look,
The sinking sun shines like a flame.
It makes the house look old and worn,
But it's home just the same.

OUSTER SUIT IS FILED AGAINST TRACTION LINE

John R. King, as prosecuting attorney of Franklin county, Monday noon filed in the state supreme court a petition in quo warranto to oust the Columbus, Indiana & Eastern Traction Co. from operating its lines in Franklin county under a franchise granted by the board of county commissioners June 1, two years ago, and to compel that company to return to its franchise of June 1st, 1900, by which city service was given to residents of the neighborhood of the national pike between Hague avenue and the Big Four railroad crossing.

On March 27th, 1920, the board of county commissioners took steps to improve the national road west from the city boundary, and called upon the traction company to take steps to do its part of this work. The company complained that it was financially embarrassed and that inasmuch as its franchise was about to run out it could not raise the money for the improvement.

It suggested that if a new franchise would be given it could use this franchise as a means of raising money and that it would proceed with the work. The new franchise adopted by the commissioners failed to contain the provision of the old franchise, which compelled the traction company to furnish service for the several blocks between the city limits and the Big Four railroad crossing, it being declared by the prosecutor then in office, the commissioners state, that this provision was unnecessary, since the state public utilities commission would have charge of the situation.

While the improving of West Broad street was going on, the traction company discontinued its local service and after the improvement was completed refused to heed the demands of the commissioners that the service be resumed.

The quo warranto proceeding filed Monday noon by Prosecutor King declared the last franchise granted by the commissioners as void and of no effect for the reason that the county received no consideration for the same and that it was not granted upon the consent of the requisite number of abutting property holders. It seeks to re-establish the old franchise and to oust the company because it has not complied with its provisions.

Mr. and Mrs. P. S. Quinn, 475 South Warren avenue, announce the engagement of their daughter, Catherine Eugenia, to Mr. Joseph M. Dunn, son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Dunn, of Marion, Ohio. The wedding will take place November 14.

AID SOUTH SEA ISLES

French Plan Rehabilitation of Marquesas Group.

Moral and Material Advancement of the Inhabitants Part of the Scheme —Marvelously Fertile Valleys Offer Opportunities.

Honolulu, T. H.—The French administration of the Marquesas Islands is to attempt to rehabilitate the inhabitants and to elevate them morally and materially, largely as the result of the visit of the Bayard Dominick scientific expedition to the group two years ago, under the auspices of the Bishop Museum of Honolulu, according to a letter received by Dr. E. C. Handy, ethnologist on the museum staff, from G. de Poyen Bellelsle, the administrator.

Dr. and Mrs. Handy passed a year in the Marquesas investigating the civilization, culture and characteristics of the inhabitants as a part of the museum's efforts to trace the origin of the Polynesian race.

The administrator's principal purpose is to develop commercial opportunities for the natives and to establish schools, the letter said. The commercial development depends upon direct steamship connections between San Francisco and the Marquesas, which have been the scene of much of the popular literature purporting to portray the languid life of the South seas. Such connections would enable the natives to eliminate the middlemen at Tahiti, who have reaped enormous profits from the efforts of the Marquesans, Dr. Handy said.

"Commercially the Marquesas present great possibilities," he added. "There are many expansive valleys of unsurpassed fertility, which formerly supported a dense population. These were cultivated by the natives, and produced breadfruit, taro and bananas Today all is neglected, there being only scattering coconut plantations."

There are a number of excellent harbors in the Marquesas, Dr. Handy said. He also expressed the opinion that some day fueling stations might be established there for vessels passing between Australia and Panama.

NOW IN BREAD LINE

Emperor's Sweetheart Becomes Victim of Hapsburg Curse.

Treasures Given to Katherina Schratt by Francis Joseph Have Disappeared and She Now Begs Food in Streets.

Vienna.—Katherina Schratt, the margantic wife of Francis Joseph, last emperor of the Austrians, the woman who once ruled a nation through her influence over the aged monarch, is now a daily member of the bread line in Vienna, standing patiently hour after hour, awaiting the bread and meat ration handed out by the government. Her jewels, given her by her royal lover, are gone. Her clothes are in tatters, and she is a living reminder of the curse of the Hapsburgs.

When the emperor died in 1916 he left $250,000 to Katherina Schratt to care for her in her declining years. But the ravages of war, and her many gifts to those less fortunate, soon depleted this small fortune, until at last she was reduced to poverty. Once the beauty of the Austrian stage, petted and feted wherever she appeared, she now lives in a barren garret, dependent upon charity for her livelihood.

For 35 years, from the bloom of youth until middle age bent her shoulders, Katherina Schratt virtually ruled Austria through her hold on Francis Joseph. For her he built a little villa right by the gates of the royal palace, and there he spent much of his time, especially after the events which tended to uphold the Hapsburg curse.

The first manifestation of this curse came with the death of mad King Ludwig of Bavaria, Francis Joseph's cousin, and of his brother, Maximilian, shot in Mexico. Then there was the case of Johann Orth, his nephew, who ran away to sea as a common sailor and was never heard from again. The death of the young daughter of Archduke Albrecht, whose dress caught fire from a cigarette she was smoking, and that of the Duchess d'Alencon in the charity ball fire in Paris, quickly followed. In 1889, Francis Joseph's son, Rudolph, committed suicide in Meyerling, and nine years later his wife, Elizabeth, was assassinated at Geneva.

Then, to crown his sorrows, came the tragic assassination of the heir to the throne, Archduke Ferdinand, at Sarajevo, the incident that started the World war. Through all his troubles, the emperor clung to Katherina Schratt, but the Hapsburg curse has now descended upon her, and she has become a member of the bread line in Vienna.

RELATES STORY OF PLANE WRECK

Captain Macmillan Tells of Thrilling Experience Afloat on Wrecked Seaplane.

NATIVE BRIG PASSES THEM BY

Aviators Engaged in Round-the-World Flight Rescued After 60 Hours by Steam Launch Sent in Search of Them.

London.—"Below us were sharks; near the land crocodiles. Would we float near enough to ground our inverted top hamper and signal some one ashore, or risk swimming for it? Then our hopes were shattered, for an undercurrent caught our submerged planes and fuselage, and faster than we could near the land, we were pulled away from it. Quickly it faded and our hopes sank. We were utterly helpless, and at the mercy of the wind and the tide."

The above sentences are taken from the long and thrilling narrative which records the terrible experiences of Capt. Norman Macmillan and Capt. Maillins while afloat for 60 hours on a wrecked seaplane in the Bay of Bengal. They were engaged in a round-the-world flight organized by the Daily News.

Brig Passes Them By.

"Suddenly we noticed an alteration in the trim of our craft," continues the narrative. "Round and round we plunged, water pouring over us, hanging on tooth and nail, and soaked by the repeated wash that broke completely over us. Evidently we were in a tide whirl."

Perhaps the most impressive thing in the story is Captain Macmillan's account of their abandonment by a native brig which passed near them when they were almost spent. "Maillins could hear beautiful instrumental music," writes Macmillan, "and I the sound of the pipes playing laments in the distance. We did not mention this to each other at the time. We were each afraid of that.

"Suddenly we saw a sail away down south. Was it coming up? Yes, slowly.

"A windjammer. Soon its yards appeared. Gradually it came along. Standing up we could see the hull. It was all we could do to remain upright.

"We waved our distress flag, signaling the international S. O. S. The brig was coming straight for us. She must almost run us down. She could not fail to see us.

Rescued After Hours.

"Was she changing her course? Surely not, but she was.

"She turned off not half a mile away, and steadily passed up within half a mile, with two men looking at us from the poop.

"God! what inhumanity! Surely it could not be.

"Maillins, frantically waving, slipped and fell half overboard, cursing at his hurt, cursing the brig and her crew, and writhing.

"Standing on our rocking float, I waved and hailed and fired pistol shots.

"But steadily she swept past, a native brig. Two men on the poop ran forward as she was abreast of us. They saw us, undoubtedly, and were possibly terrified of ghosts and visions.

"But in mercy let them never know what we felt like."

The two aviators were rescued some hours later by a steam launch sent out in search of them.

FLEES MAN; LEAPS TO DEATH

Pursued by Man With Horsewhip Frightened Woman Jumps From Fourth-Story Window.

New York.—Screams and the crack of a horsewhip brought tenants in the vicinity of 271 West Twenty-seventh street from their homes just in time to see a young woman leap madly to her death from the fourth story of the building.

All that the neighbors knew about this woman was that her name was Mae Leamon and that she lived in a furnished room on the second floor. About 7:30 o'clock they heard her cry out and then raise her voice to a sharp scream as loud reports like the crack of a heavy whip were heard. Then the neighbors saw a man chase her to the roof, whence she jumped down to the third-floor landing of the fire escape.

After her went the man, and she frantically scrambled up to the top of an attic window on the fourth floor.

Those who had rushed to the street yelled to her not to jump. Help was coming, for they saw Patrolman Frederick Robenstein of the West Thirtieth street station running toward them. Some said that he shouted, "Wait a second—I'll be right up to help you."

Perhaps the patrolman was too far away for the woman to hear him or possibly she was so wild with fear that words were meaningless to her. She jumped.

REMOVAL OF STAINS FROM CLOTHING

The following is copied from Farmer's Bulletin 861, U. S. Department of Agriculture: The removal of stains from clothing and other textiles is a necessary feature of the laundering and general care of household linens or wearing apparel. Most stains may be removed easily at home if reliable methods are known and a few simple precautions are taken. Too much emphasis cannot be laid on the importance of applying stain removers while the stain is fresh for usually it is much more difficult to remove the stain after it has once "set."

The nature of the stain should be known, if possible, before its removal is attempted. For example, if hot water, which easily removes most fresh fruit stains be applied to such stains as milk, egg or meats, it coagulates the albumen in the fibers of the cloth and makes it difficult to remove. Also the kind of fabric upon which the stain occurs should be known. Cotton and linen are destroyed by strong acids and damaged by some of the weaker ones. Concentrated acids, therefore, should never be used in removing stains from these fabrics and when dilute acids are used they should be neutralized afterwards with a suitable alkali or removed by thorough rinsing.

Wool and silk being more delicate than cotton or linen require more careful treatment. The use of very hot water must be avoided. The only alkalis which should be used in laundering or removing stains from silk and wool are the milder ones like borax or dilute ammonia.

It is also more difficult to remove stains from colored than from white materials for the reason that most of the beaching agents which must be used are likely to destroy the color of the goods as well.

Next week we will give some general methods for treatment of stains.

A Graphic Guide to Investments

For the average investor, the most important consideration in buying securities is to be sure of the character of the issuing corporation, its management, the investment house placing the issue, and to the able to check up on the security itself, its earnings and interest return. Each of these is of utmost importance.

Few individual investors have the time or training for thoroughly investigating these things and have need to seek help. A short but concise chart of essential points to be tested is of great assistance to these and by the intelligent use of such a guide, much time and loss may be saved.

Embodied in a neat chart, I have summarized the points to be considered in making your investment decisions.

Send for this chart and make it your investment guide in testing the securities you now hold and in determining the value of those that may be hereafter offered to you for investment. Your present securities, if long held, may have changed in character since you bought them and it may be worth your while to check them up beginning now, by means of this chart. Many of my best clients have adopted this plan of testing all offerings made to them. In this way they get a much clearer idea of the value of an investment than is otherwise possible.

The chart is yours for the asking. Clip this item from the Hilltop Record, sign your name and address, mail to me and the chart will be furnished you very promptly.

The New Hilltop Library to be Ready for Service Soon

The new Holmes Library is an assured fact for the Hilltop. It is the gift of the late Dr. Holmes, and contains over 3000 volumes, being valued at between eight and ten thousand dollars. The books are very valuable, containing fiction, science and history. It will be, especially valuable for school pupils, as it contains many volumes of history of the great wars as well as science.

The library will be located on the second floor of the Hilltop Branch of the Citizens Trust & Saving Bank Building at the corner of South Park and Broad and it is expected to be opened about December 1st and will be open every afternoon and evening. A reading room will be in connection to which everybody will be welcome.

A campaign to raise funds for the support and upkeep of the library is under way. Captains for ten teams have been appointed by the Hilltop Chamber of Commerce, the names of which are as follows: Rev. R. E. Shields, Rev. R. T. Stimmel, Dr. Howard Whitehead, Frank Cussins, C. B. Heimbrecht, J. W. Worrell, A. P. Elliot, W. L. Millikin, Mrs. Karl Weber, R. G. Haunts. One of these persons will probably call on you. Please be ready and lets all help to boost this, a most valuable addition to the Hilltop.

Pelicen Pecks

Webster's Dictionary—

Pelican—(pel'i-kan), noun, a large aquatic bird with a huge axe-shaped bill; or a dentist's instrument.

Peck—(pek), verb trans.—to strike with the beak.

The dictionary makes interesting reading. One learns so much one did not know.

The publisher of Mr. Westlake's [illegible] he will allow THE PELICAN to PECK away with that beak (axe-shaped) of his for a few issues nipping at Hilltop interests as much as any thing else but limited to nothing except "pecks."

Peck One.—That Prohibition issue. Did you see the way the WETS mowed under the DRYS? O! Didn't you? Neither did we. Watchful voting did it. We won't be asleep when old John Barleycorn trys to rise from his deep-dug grave!

Peck Two.—A brick slinging party will be held on West Broad Street tomorrow. All able body workers who want to see the Railyway, Power and Light finish this job of street paving and track (de) laying will please be on hand. THE PELICAN thinks the job ought to be finished within a week; what do you say?

Peck Three.—BOOKS! BOOKS! BOOKS! And money to run it. What for? Why haven't you heard. The Chamber of Commerce with W. L. Millikin, chairman of twenty men are to accept Judge Holmes Memorial Library of over 3000 volumes as the start for the HILLTOP LIBRARY! Location? Why, over the bank building of coures. They ask that you join the Association by maintaining the library by paying $5.00 dues a year. When the tennis come around stand up like a man and haul out the coin. THE PELICAN believes this the most worthwhile venture for the good of Hilltop that has come along for a long time. Let the two West Side Councilmen up and at this!!

Peck Four.—Re-surface Broad Street next!!

Peck Five.—Stop at Eldon, S. Terrace and West Broad and enjoy this one! Filling Station, Damnation, Restoration, and Salvation. Central Ohio Station, Dusenbery's Unfinished Movie House, Dr. Fletcher's Office, and Hilltop Lutheran Church.

Peck Six.—Will someone page J. W. and W. J. Dusenbery for us, please. "Procrastination is the thief of DIMES."

—THE PELICAN.

SUICIDE DIES EN ROUTE TO HOSPITAL AFTER TAKING POISON

Walter Gatton, 28, farmer, two miles south of Rome, committed suicide Sunday by taking poison. Becoming despondent over financial matters, Gatton took poison and then prepared to accompany his wife to church. On the way to church, while driving, he told his wife that if she wanted to live with him any longer she had better rush him to a hospital, and then told her what he had done. Gatton started for the hospital, but on the way collapsed. His wife then took the wheel, but becoming nervous, was compelled to stop. Hailing a passing machine she told the driver what had happened. He put Gatton in his machine, but Gatton died before Mt. Carmel Hospital was reached. When she returned home Mrs. Gatton found a note written by her husband, which told her to collect his insurance and settle financial matters of the family.

Gatton leaves a widow, Mrs. Bertha Gatton, and three brothers. Funeral services were held Wednesday at the residence. Burial in Alton Cemetery by C. J. Kohn.

West Broad St. School lost a most promising pupil in the death of Marion Barrell. This little lad of seven entered school a year ago and made such rapid progress that he was promoted to the 2A and although he skipped a grade he kept his name on the Roll of Honor for scholarship and habits of study. He was a great favorite with teachers and pupils alike.

MAKE NEW MAP OF U. S.

Uncle Sam Contributes Work as Part of Sketch of World.

American Map Will Take About Twelve Years to Complete—Each Country Will Map Territories and Waters Under Its Jurisdiction.

Washington.—Uncle Sam is progressing on a new map of the country, to be a part of a new world map, based upon a simple system proposed by American representatives in 1908, and accepted at international conferences. It will be the result of years of effort to create a system of cartography whereby the same scale of distances could be used in a world map, with lettering and symbols uniform. The American map is expected to be completed in ten or twelve years.

Each country will map the territories and waters under its own jurisdiction.

The globe is to be divided into 1,642 sections. Each section is designated by a distinctive letter and number combination, in addition to a name derived from the locality mapped. Each sheet, covering one section, will cover 6 degrees of longitude and 4 degrees of latitude. The sheets are numbered from one to sixty, beginning at the 180th meridian of longitude and girdling the globe to the eastward, and are lettered from A to V, north and south, with the equator as a starting point. The north and south polar regions are to be shown in circular sections from the eighty-eighth parallel of latitude, and letter Z-north and Z-south.

The main purpose of the international map, which will be drawn on the scale of one to one-millionth, is to furnish a complete world map of uniform drawing, thus obviating different scales of distances, and to enable map makers and readers of every country to understand the maps of every other.

The details of the international map were accepted by nine world powers at conferences in 1909 and 1913. While it is popularly known as the "one-millionth" map of the world, its correct title is the international map of the world on the scale of one one-millionth.

SEA MONSTERS ATTACK BOATS

Scare Fishermen From Newfoundland Waters—Expedition to Capture Them Is Planned.

St. John's, N. F.—"Sea monsters" which are reported to be from forty to sixty feet long, have attacked boats engaged in fishing out of British Harbor, Trinity Bay, and fishermen are afraid to go on the grounds.

A large school of these "monsters," of which no detailed description has been received, appeared off the coast a few days ago and is still thought to be in the bay. An organized expedition will be sent from the settlements on which the school lies in an effort to capture or disperse it. Several boats which went out recently narrowly escaped being swamped by the "monsters."

The appearance of the school was reported to the Department of Marine and Fisheries by the telegraph operator at British Harbor.

APPLE TREE IN FULL BLOOM

Freak in Middletown (N. Y.) Garden Is Said by Old Timers to Presage a Mild Winter.

Middletown, N. Y.—In the yard of Frank Crawford on South street is an apple tree in full bloom. Never before has this tree bloomed at this time of year. Some of the oldest residents, careful weather observers for years, declare blooming of fruit trees at this time of year indicates a mild winter and are sure there will not be a big demand for coal in this section. Crawford is presenting bouquets of apple blossoms to his friends.

Radio Aids Capture of Auto Thieves.

Dyke on a charge of stealing the automobile of C. H. Hoyt. The station broadcasts the numbers and description of stolen automobiles each night.

Highest Life Policy Paid Last Year Was $1,517,820

New York.—The highest insurance policy paid in the United States and Canada last year was held by Ferdinand Schlesinger of Milwaukee, chairman of the board of directors of the Milwaukee Coke and Gas Company of America, according to the Insurance Press. The payment amounted to $1,517,820. The insurance was distributed among 24 concerns.

An inheritance tax of more than $1,250,000 was paid on the $60,000,000 estate of Mr. Schlesinger.

A Graphic Guide to Investments

For the average investor, the most important consideration in buying securities is to be sure of the character of the issuing corporation, its management, the investment house placing the issue, and to be able to check up on the security itself, its earnings and interest return. Each of these is of utmost importance.

Few individual investors have the time or training for thoroughly investigating these things and have need to seek help. A short but concise chart of essential points to be tested is of great assistance to these and by the intelligent use of such a guide, much time and loss may be saved.

Embodied in a neat chart, I have summarized the points to be considered in making your investment decisions.

Send for this chart and make it your investment guide in testing the securities you now hold and in determining the value of those that may be hereafter offered to you for investment. Your present securities, if long held, may have changed in character since you bought them and it may be worth your while to check them up beginning now, by means of this chart. Many of my best clients have adopted this plan of testing all offerings made to them. In this way they get a much clearer idea of the value of an investment than is otherwise possible.

The chart is yours for the asking. Clip this item from the Hilltop Record, sign your name and address, mail to me and the chart will be furnished you very promptly.

More Than He Bargained For

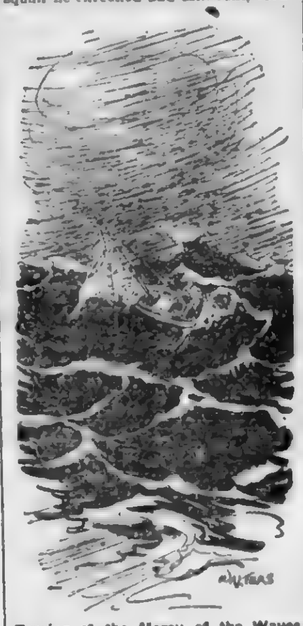
By H. LOUISE RAYBOLD

(©, 1931, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"I don't care to marry a coward!" The words flashed forth from the white lips of an imperious girl who crouched in the stern of the catboat and held out a single-stoned ring to the man who faced her astounded.



"But, Millicent, I'm not afraid for myself. Can't you understand? It's of you I'm thinking." Wade Norris had never seen his fiancee in a temper before, and the experience was unpleasantly disconcerting and disillusioning. Then he, too, set his lips. "We are going back, nevertheless."

"Am I to understand that if I weren't here you would keep on?" demanded the girl.

Wade threw a glance at the darkening sky above, then out toward the horizon, where a sharply defined black line speckled with white indicated advancing wind. "No, I hardly think I would," he murmured frankly.

"There, you see!" Her tone was cruelly triumphant. Did she really suppose that caution was synonymous with cowardice? Millicent herself was an up-to-date little daredevil, but surely that didn't justify his taking her into undoubted danger, and for so unimportant an affair as a dance at Kimball Point.

Some moments later, Wade assisted a silent girl to the dock and, himself silent, watched her run up the path to the Shermans' summer home. Then, angrily, he hauled up the sail again. There was nothing left to do but to show her how little afraid he personally was. Straight into the white squall he careened and Millicent, turning, perhaps relentingly, on the top step, saw the Waterbird scudding seaward at an ominous pitch.

Tossing at the Mercy of the Waves.

Wade was too much occupied in managing his small craft to worry very much about what the outcome of the wild ride would be. Long ago he had passed the position where he would naturally have tacked for Kimball's Point and nothing now intervened between him and the open sea. Momentarily expecting the cessation of what, at worst, he had supposed to be a summer squall, he lifted his eyes at last to the west, only to be dumbfounded at the solidarity of the cloudbank there. Something chill and ominous about the wind at the same moment forced itself upon his attention.

This was more than he had bargained for. He must swing about at the earliest possible moment. But before that moment came, catastrophe had overtaken him. A sudden, violent gust, a shiver of the entire boat, and the mainmast snapped in two, dragging the sail in the water like the wing of a wounded bird.

Wade all his life afterward remembered that night of agony, tossing at the mercy of the waves, drenched with spray, half frozen. Morning brought cessation of the storm but no hope, for the sun rose upon a shoreless waste of water. Nevertheless, Wade pluckily set to work with the sculling oar, partly to get some warmth into him, partly in a desperate effort to raise land or a lighthouse.

Well on toward noon, when Wade was feeling the effects of his long fast and unusual exertions, he caught a glimpse far away of what was undoubtedly a boat. Wade wondered if, after all, Millicent had seen his reckless departure and if, when he failed to appear again, she would have started out a rescuing party. Very likely the boat he had sighted was looking for him.

Anxiously he waited, though at one time its crew had not observed his frenzied signaling. Then, suddenly, it swerved directly toward him.

Meanwhile Millicent had spent a wakeful night, made restless by the storm without as well as the reproaches of her own heart. To be sure, she expected Wade had many hours before landed safely at Kimball's Point and a little sheepishly she hoped he would come around in the morning and apologize for scaring her half to death.

But morning brought no Wade. Toward night Millicent casually called his hotel, only to learn that he had not come in and that the Waterbird had not been docked that night. Then [illegible] that rescuing boats had gone in his direction, only to report absolute failure. Days later word came in of a wrecked catboat found drifting twenty miles off shore, but by that time Millicent had given up hope and mourned Wade as driven to his death by her perversity.

As a matter of fact, Wade had taken on the adventure of his life. The boat so opportunely met was one of those daring craft which, now and again, in the spirit of Joshua Slocum and his Spray, set out to cross the ocean. Only a forty-footer, she was staunch, adequately equipped, seaworthy.

This man they had come upon was a problem. With no wireless, his rescue could not be signaled. On the other hand, to make a harbor would be to lose valuable time.

"Tell you what we'll do," said the skipper. "We're short one man anyway, and we'll sign you on, Norris, if you're willing."

And Wade, reflecting that the only person for whom he held the slightest interest in the world had just returned his ring and called him a coward, replied that to do so would be a great pleasure.

Weeks later Millicent, a thinner, more chastened Millicent than the imperious girl of old, listlessly unfolded the morning paper. Suddenly she gasped and her face slowly whitened. The shock of it was tremendous.

Forty-footer arrives at Cowes with crew of six, among them Wade Norris, thought to be drowned.

Wade was alive! Wade was alive!

At first the realization of that miraculous fact was enough for Millicent. Then, little by little, the somber thought claimed her attention that she had little right to rejoice. Suddenly to find that she had not been, in effect, his murderer, did not lessen her responsibility.

An hour later, Millicent received a cable.

"Sail for home today. Owe you most wonderful experience of my life. Love. Wade."

Millicent let the cable fall into her lap and her eyes were starry. Fate was being better to her than she deserved.

FIX GERMAN TAX LEVY

Total Taxable Property 1,950 Billion Paper Marks.

Seventy Per Cent of the Aggregate Is Given as Real and Personal Property—13 Billions Held by the Poorest Classes.

Berlin.—The total taxable property held by the German people amounts to 1,950 milliards paper marks, according to estimate made by Reconstruction in its current issue. Seventy per cent of the aggregate is given as personal and real property, 11 per cent as town property, 14 per cent rural, 2 per cent mining, and 3 per cent as goods, ships, metallic currency, etc. (Milliard equals the American billion.)

The average of prewar estimates on German-owned private property, the periodical states, works out at 330 milliards gold marks, from which amount the following deductions should be made:

Thirty milliards gold marks in state property (belonging to the empire, individual states and local authorities, such as railways, canals, forests, etc.); 13 milliards of property held by the poorest classes which escapes taxation, and further, a sum amounting to about 20 per cent of the total which either is especially favored by the regulations for economic reasons or manages to evade taxation. This amounts to about 66 milliards gold marks.

Deducting these 108 milliards from the prewar average of estimates, a balance of 222 milliards remains. From this total, however, Reconstruction states, the following sums must be deducted as a result of the war: Twenty-five milliards in values destroyed by the war (amounting originally to 50 milliards, one-half having been made good by reconstruction); 80 milliards loss on capital invested abroad; 25 milliards loss of territory, and 10 milliards surrendered to the entente in railways, ships, etc.

The sum left after taking off these 90 milliards in losses, the publication sets roundly at 130 milliards gold marks. In converting gold into paper marks, it states, the following index numbers based on the prices current in the home German market should be employed: Personal and real property, 15; town landed property, 2; rural landed property, 10; mining property, 10; and goods, ships, etc., 60.

When the various categories of property are multiplied by these figures their values in paper marks are determined. According to this calculation, the average depreciation index figure is 15, thus giving 1,950 milliards paper marks as equivalent to 130 milliards in gold.

GIRL ENGINEER ON LINER

Miss Violet Drummond, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Drummond of Forfarshire, has sailed as an engineer with the Blue Funnel steamer Anchises from Glasgow for Australia. She adopted marine engineering as a profession and takes on all the duties of the job. During the war she was in the engineering department of the Lithgow Bank foundry.

Helpful Hints for Hilltop Homes

The following paragraphs deal with methods and reagents commonly used in the removal of a number of stains.

Laundering: For cotton, linen and washable silks and woolens soak the materials in cold or luke warm water rubbing the stain with a neutral soap if necessary. Rinse, thoroughly, in clear water. If the materials are delicate sponge them by spreading the article on a flat surface, in a good light, placing a clean pad of cloth or white blotting paper beneath the stain, changing for a fresh one as soon as it becomes soiled. Sponge with a clean lintless cloth applying the water to the wrong side of material so that the stain can be washed from the fibers onto the pad without having to pass through the material.

Application of Chemicals: Care should be taken that the laundering is satisfactory before applying the chemicals for they attack the fibers of the cloth as well as the stain. Chemicals most commonly used are Jarelle water, a solution of permanganate of potassium, oxalic acid, ammonia, French chalk and cream of tartar. As some of these chemicals are poisonous they should be carefully labeled and stored in a place secure from careless or heedless handling. Work rapidly when using chemicals so as to give them as little time as possible to act on the textile fibers. Stretch the stained portion of the garment over a bowl and apply chemicals with a medicine dropper rinsing immediately by sponging with water.

Bear in mind hot water should be avoided in treating unknown stains until after other substances have been tried since hot water will set many stains making their removal difficult.

Any questions on the removal of ordinary stains will be gladly answered in this column by writing to "Helpful Hints" care of Hilltop Record.

INCREASE SHOWN IN INCOME TAX

7,463,177 Individual and Corporation Returns Made in 1920, Paying $2,700,288,329.

33 IN MILLION-A-YEAR CLASS

Four Paid Taxes on Incomes in Excess of $5,000,000, Two of These Listed From New York and Two From Michigan.

How would you like to have to pay taxes on an income of $5,000,000 a year? Four men did in 1920.

Washington.—Complete statistics of income for the calendar year 1920, made public by the commissioner of internal revenue, show that 7,250,944 individuals filed income tax returns, paying a total tax of $1,075,053,080, and that 208,233 corporations reported net incomes taxed at $1,625,284,648.

As compared with 1919, the figures show a growth of 1,927,184 in the number of returns and an increase in the total net income reported amounting to $3,876,137,735, but a decrease of $194,570,418 in the total tax.

Thirty-three individuals in the United States paid taxes on net incomes in excess of $1,000,000, nineteen paying on $1,000,000 to $1,500,000. Three paid taxes on incomes in excess of $1,500,000; four on incomes from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000, and four paid taxes on incomes in excess of $5,000,000, two of these being listed from New York and two from Michigan.

New York in Lead.

Of the total income tax New York paid 23.30 per cent; Pennsylvania, 12.13 per cent; Illinois, 8.08 per cent; Ohio, 6.76 per cent, and Massachusetts, 5.82 per cent. These five states together paid 57.08 per cent of the combined personal and corporation tax of the country. These states, with seven others, Michigan, Indiana, Iowa, New Jersey, California, Missouri and Maryland, 12 states in all, paid 95.83 per cent of the total tax.

The number of corporation income tax returns for the calendar year 1920 was 345,595. Of these 208,233 reported net income amounting to $7,902,654,813; income tax, $636,508,292; war profits and excess profits tax, $988,726,351; total tax, $1,625,284,648.

For the calendar year 1919 the number of corporation returns was 330,198, of which 209,034 reported net income totaling $9,411,418,458 and taxes aggregating $2,175,341,578.

There were 160 corporations that filed returns for 1920 reporting net income of $5,000,000 and over; 836 that filed returns of from $1,000,000 to $5,000,000; 1,142 that filed returns of from $500,000 to $1,000,000; 2,124 from $250,000 to $500,000; 5,407 from $100,000 to $250,000; 7,092 from $50,000 to $100,000; 35,994 from $10,000 to $50,000; 27,615 from $5,000 to $10,000; 46,866 from $2,000 to $5,000, and 75,905 that reported net income to $2,000.

Greatest Net Income.

New York filed the greatest number of returns, both individual and corporation, and reported the greatest amount of net income, followed by Pennsylvania and Illinois. New York's total returns were 1,108,129, of which 1,047,634 were personal and 55,495 corporation.

The number of returns filed by non resident aliens, resident aliens, and foreign corporations in business or holding investments in the United States was 12,432, showing a net total income of $148,449,199, on which the federal tax was $21,065,882.

The report shows that out of approximately 345,000 capital stock tax returns 326,100 were tabulated, showing a fair value of $75,400,625,174. Of this aggregate fair value, the manufacturing group reports approximately $30,500,000,000 or 40 per cent.

The next highest is finance, banking, insurance, etc., with $13,700,000,000 or 18 per cent; transportation and other public utilities representing $11,400,000,000, or 15 per cent; mining and quarrying, $6,700,000,000, or 9 per cent. The agricultural group reports only $1,000,000,000, or 1 1-3 per cent.

SEVEN DEAD IN CUBAN FEUD

Two Families in Island Republic Are Determined on Exterminating Each Other.

Guanajay, Cuba.—Seven killings in three years marked the Sanchez-Caro feud, which, the authorities have announced, must be ended if it requires the imprisonment of every remaining member of the two families. The latest fatalities occurred when Felix Caruche shot Bathilde Sanchez and then himself. The shooting was the outgrowth of a duel last February, in which Juan Sanchez, Bathilde's brother, killed Felix' brother, Luis.

Siam's Women Buy Black Teeth.

London.—An interesting feature of the international dental exhibition, now being held in London, are the sets of artificial teeth made of a composition as black as ebony. They are intended for Siamese women, who from it is the custom to stain their teeth black with betel nut to denote their married state.

Tact of Lord Rosebery Shown in Way He Avoided Offending Well-Meaning Individual.

An incident in connection with the visit of Lord Rosebery, the former British premier, to Oxford some years ago to unveil Lord Salisbury's bust is told by the Rt. Rev. Sir David Hunter Blair in his "New Medley of Memories." He says: "I had repeated to his Oxford hostess a story told me by the principal of a Scottish university, of how Lord Rosebery, engaged to speak at a great liberal meeting in a northern city, found himself previously dining with a fanatically teetotal provost, who provided for his guests no other liquid refreshment than lemonade in large glass jugs. As this depressing beverage circulated, the liberal leader's spirits fell almost to zero; and it was by the advice of my friend the principal that, between the dinner and the meeting, he drove extra a terre to an hotel, and quaffed a pint of dry champagne before mounting the platform and making a speech of fiery eloquence, which the next provost attributed entirely to the lemonade. The lady, unknown to me, agreed on the delectable story to one of the Union committee, who took it very seriously; the result being that when Lord Rosebery reached the committee room, just before the inauguration ceremony, a grave young man whispered to him confidentially: 'There are tea and coffee here; but I have got your pint of champagne behind that screen; will you come and have it now?' 'Well, do you know?' said the great man, with his usual tact, 'I think for once in a way I will have a cup of coffee.'"

Birds Deserve Better Treatment.

Birds are actually the most helpful animal friend which man has, destroying the insect and rodent pests which devour his crops, and acting as scavengers to prevent the dangerous increase of carrion or filth. Yet most of them look upon man as an enemy and a stranger, and certainly not without cause, for have not birds watched the development of mammals, watched them spread throughout the earth, watched entire species rise, rule and perish, watch the multitudes of changes of a million years? Mammals are strangers, newcomers upon the face of the earth, often deadly enemies of the birds which fear them because of these things.

Social Items

The Best Ever Club entertained their husbands and friends with an evening party Friday, November 10th, at the home of Miss Winifred Mott, 71 Eldon Avenue. The evening was spent in games and various amusements, several very fine prizes being awarded the lucky ones. A two course luncheon was served at a late hour.

Two concert lectures were given at the John Burroughs School Auditorium on Friday afternoon and evening, November 10th, by Mr. G. T. Cooper, the Brunswick phonograph dealer of the Hilltop. The lectures included many pictures for children with their accompanying stories and views from "Rambles through Paris" and "Rambles through London." The auditorium was well filled with patrons of the school and an interesting and instructive evening was enjoyed by all present. The proceeds derived from the entertainment will be used in the purchase of shrubbery for beautifying the grounds of the John Burroughs School.

Mr. and Mrs. O. T. Fletcher, 88 Eldon Avenue, entertained with a Cozy Inn party last Friday evening. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Fred B. Wilson, sons Gerald and Robert, Mrs. Freeman, Mr. Louis Freeman, Mrs. Sarah Buscher, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Buscher and daughter Inez.

Miss Virgie Carter of North Hague Avenue, was told she would have a caller Friday evening, instead of having one, the entire Seiller force of girls gave her a genuine surprise. It happened to be Miss Carters birthday but she thought it was a secret. The secret leaked out. A very fine time was reported.

THE BROOKLET

I come from mosses, swamps and hollows;
O'er me sway many pretty swallows.

I crash into many pebbles, and flow gently down to the bay,
Where birds may fly North and others may fly South,
But I flow gently on my way.

I flow through many ridges, and beam in gleaming bays,
But still I flow gently on my way.

((A poem written by Louise Woerner of the 6-B English class.)

The following little story was written in twenty minutes in the 4-A English class:

'There was a little fairy sprang out of a heart of a rose. It was a beautiful moonlight night. She could hear the brook rippling over the stones, and could see the bubbles coming up here, there and everywhere. She waved her wand from right to left, and out sprang the little fairies very happy and gay. They took hold of hands and danced about. But they were startled at hearing a sound. They turned around and lo! who did they see but an earth mortal standing and staring at them. They quickly ran away and hid themselves, some in a lily cup, some in a heart of a rose, and some in a buttercup. The queen of the fairies peeped out to see if she could see the earth mortal, but it was nowhere to be seen. Then she whispered to the rest, "come out again, come out again." So they all popped out and was not disturbed again but they continued their dancing on the green.

Pelican Pecks

The Pelican's nest is built so high that great hunters of the world say he sees much that nobody else takes the trouble to see. But he comes down to earth too!

The Pelican pecks away whether he gets his object or not—so here goes:

First Peck—Allyn K. Foster in his 'cartoons in Character" takes up the case of Tilly Telltale. "Tilly," says he, "has a large an influential clan. Telltale is among the list of all clubs, organizations and churches. The signs are unmistakable. Put your ear to the ground and if conditions are normal you will hear first a whisper, then a clatter, then a roar!" He quotes Congreve as saying: "I know a lady that loves talking so incessantly she won't give an echo fair play."

Don't allow someone in an unthinking moment to nickname you—"Tilly" or for that matter male too—"Tillman" Telltale!

Second Peck—Take a walk up West Broad. Glance first to the right and then to the left. Then judging by the Undertaking Establishments—the Hilltop is some DEAD place!

Third Peck—The Turkey that most needs to be led to the block of wood is that one in Asia and flavored with a little Greece!

Fourth Peck—Ford Agency on the Hilltop! That is—it is coming along even tho' "time like a thief is stealing away." Hey, Os, why not hurry that job a little!

Fifth Peck—D'you ever notice how our Hilltop merchants stick together! Neither did we! Say, men if butter held together the way some of you do we'd pour it from the vinegar cruet.

Sixth Peck—Beautiful Building that by Burkett! Keep them coming. All those vacant lots along West Broad ought to be given the once over by the Assessors!!

Seventh Peck—Don't blow about your own business too much—ill winds can blow too! Save your help or the other man—none ever regrets such help.

THE PELICAN.

BOYS

A Hilltop woman recently lost a pocketbook containing $30.00; another $20.00 another $12.00. All were advertised for, but without result. Someone asks, who could have found these and have them. The answer comes—"Oh some boy got 'em."

A business man goes to the expense of having a large bundle of bills printed advertising his wares. He hires two boys at good pay to distribute them. Result—a few days later a large part of them were found "ditched" in one pile.

Another business man has bills printed at a large expense. Four boys are given the job of passing. Results—one big pile burned up and another bunch buried in a hole dug in a vacant lot.

A nuisance is committed very few nights near the front door of a Hilltop business home. The question is asked, who does it. Answer Some devilish boy.

And so we might keep on down the line till some with pessimist opinions about boys might say "They're all alike, none worth while,". But that's not the case. Dishonest and unprincipled boys, like men of the same mind, are far in the minority when compared with the honest and upright ones.

We have often thought what an influence good, upright, honest boys could bring to bear upon their comrades who were inclined to trickery if they would be more ready to show their disapproval of dishonest or unmanly acts whenever the opportunity presented itself. Such boys, just like men of that kind, might display some resentment at being "called," but nevertheless a word of advice or admonition given in a frank gentle way would in all probability find lodging and possibly bring forth fruit some day.

A dishonest boy, unless he mends his ways, is sure to grow into a dishonest man. If a boy practices trickery in his boyhood days, there is no doubt that he will do so in business, a few years hence, unless he's leaded off "As the twig is bent the tree is inclined."

The publisher of the Record has had considerable dealing with boys during the past several years—both in a business and social way, and we are fully convinced that the "woods are full" of good, honest, upright boys. Boys who know what a square deal is and will give the same when tried. 'Tis true, boys get careless sometimes, but we believe that comes from the head and not the heart. And right here, we wish to state that we believe we have got as good a bunch of carrier boys on the Record as we ever have had. Of course we have in the past had splendid boys, but taken as a whole our present force has has not been surpassed. Here's to you, boys, keep it up.

FOR THE ELIZABETH HOME

Addition to Home Will Double Capacity of Institution

A campaign for $15,000 with which to pay the balance due on the property and provide for the opening a new dormitory. Will be opened on Nov. 14th, by the Elizabeth Home, Patterson Avenue and Williams Street, and will continue until Jan. 1st. It was announced by Milton J. Mench, President, speaking for the Board of Directors.

The new dormitory on the third floor will accommodate 18 more patients, more than doubling the present capacity of the home at the present time.

Rapid strides in efficiently taking care of its patients and improving conditions at the home have been made during the past year. Forty-one babies have been ushered into the world in the maternity ward. The addition of a new heating plant, an up to date nursery and new sterilizing and maternity rooms have greatly aided the home in caring for its patients.

The staff has been increased by the addition of a registered nurse, Miss Geneva Swartzal, formerly supervising nurse at Protestant Hospital, and Miss Emma E. Sawyer of Rockford, Ill., whose wide experience in field and evangelistic work peculiarly fits her to assist in speaking and in representing the home before churches and societies, Miss Sawyer will be prominently identified with the fund drive.

The opening gun will be fired Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock, when vounteer workers from the various churches and stores and other friends of the home will meet there for a social hour with the management. They will be given an opportunity to view the work and lend their aid and influence toward wiping out the obligation that stands against the home for the purchase of the property.

Signal Flannel Shirts for men, $3 to $6. Chas. E. Houx.

This bicycle now on display in Dulgar window will be given away Christmas Eve, to the holder of the lucky number. Ticket with every 25c purchase.

Waldo Baird, 74, retired farmer, of Athens, Ohio, father of Leonard Baird of 164 North Burgess Avenue, died from complications Wednesday, Nov. 8, at Mt. Carmel Hospital. He leaves a widow, Mrs. Mary Baird; another son and two daughters. The body will be sent to Athens Thursday for funeral and burial by Clifford J. Kohn, of 2456 West Broad Street.

Harrison Parks, 40, colored, formerly of Bellaire, Ohio, died from complications Nov. 8, at the Columbus State Hospital. The body was sent to Bellaire for funeral and burial by the Hilltop Undertaking Co.

Mary Jeanette Blevins, 2, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Blevins, 454 South Warren Avenue, died from pneumonia at the home of her parents Thursday, Nov. 9. She leaves her parents, two brothers and one sister. Funeral at 1 p. m. Saturday at the residence. Burial in Green Lawn by C. J. Kohn, 2456 West Broad Street.

Helpful Hints for Hilltop Homes

HOW TO SELECT FOODS

The common food materials are grouped, ordinarily under five heads and the housewife is advised to make sure the diet each day include something from each of these groups.

The five groups are as follows:

(1) Fruits and vegetables which contain mineral matter and vitamines.

(2) Milk, eggs and meats which furnish protein.

(3) Cereals, which contain starch.

(4) Sugar or other sweets which provide body fuel.

(5) Fats.

In selecting and using foods care must be taken to prevent waste. This means calculating carefully how much will be needed and also making good use of foods left over. Provide the very best of bread which in the main is the staff of life. Sodden biscuits or underdone loaf bread are a menace to health. Ordinarily cereal foods do not appeal to the taste if served alone but they may be made very appetizing if combined with more highly flavored foods.

A well seasoned soup may lead to the eating of a greater amount of bread. A little meat or fish, or a small amount of cheese may be used to follow a fairly large dish of rice or macaroni.

Eggs and milk, particularly skim milk, raise the proportion of tissue building material, fat and sugar lower it. Raisins, besides giving a variety of flavor, raise the proportion of mineral substances, particularly iron.

As a general rule the greater the part played by cereals the cheaper the diet. Up to a certain point one may cut down the quantity of meat, eggs, butter, fruits and vegetables used and substitute cereal foods but there is a limit beyond which this can not be safely done. A sample day's ration for a family of two adults and three young children should contain 3 pounds bread or its equivalent in a variety of cereal foods, 2 quarts milk, 1½ pounds medium fat meat, 9 ounces butter, 10 ounces sugar and 10 pounds fruit. However, a person engaged in sedentary pursuits does not require the same amount or kinds of food as does one engaged in more active pursuits.

Corn Meal Pumpkin Dodgers

One one-half cups cooked pumpkin, 3 tablespoons shortening, 1½ cups cornmeal, sweeten (not too much) and salt to taste. To the pumpkin add the other ingredients and mix thoroughly. Have the mixture just soft enough to form into cakes, place on a griddle and bake about 20 minutes in a hot oven. If desired the corn meal may be mixed with the pumpkin and steamed about 10 minutes before adding the other ingredients.

Sweet potatoes (cooked) may be substituted for the pumpkin if desired and provides a good way to use "left overs."

Attend the opening of the E. & B. Shoe Store. 2469 West Broad Street. Saturday, November 18.

Bit of Flannel Leads Woman to Kill Other

Suncook, N. H.—Mrs. Harry G. Carpenter of this town was shot and killed by her next-door neighbor, Mrs. Barton Goward, who then went into her own house and committed suicide.

When the bodies of the two women were found it was believed Mrs. Carpenter had died of heart disease while running to summon assistance when she found her neighbor dead. Examination of the woman's body later revealed a bullet wound in the back.

A quarrel between the two women over the price of a piece of flannel led to the shooting, according to information given to the police. Mrs. Goward, the authorities said, had bought the flannel from Mrs. Carpenter, and when the latter came to collect there was a dispute.

Heart Pierced by Glass.

Los Angeles, Cal.—James Thomas, fourteen, student at the Inglewood high school, in trying to prevent a door with a glass panel from slamming, thrust his hand through the panel and a sliver of glass pierced his heart. As if nothing had happened he walked down the steps of the building. Then he collapsed and death came quickly.

Married Six Months, but Never Was Kissed

"I have been married six months and my husband, Walter, has never kissed me," Mrs. Julia Brightmore, young and pretty, of Chicago, told Judge Mangan when she entered a plea for divorce.

To the court's questions, she said she had never been kissed before marriage and expected a whole lot of kissing after the ceremony. She was given a divorce.

LAND OF SPLENDID CHURCHES

Spanish Sacred Edifices Declared to Glow With All the Splendor of All the Arts.

One thing the churches of Spain possess that can be found nowhere else in all the world, and that is the manifestation of all the arts of Christianity assembled in definite places, that is to say, since Spain has never been subject to the Reformation, the social revolution of the Eighteenth century or the restorations of the Nineteenth, the churches are still as they were, full of the glory of all the arts, so that architecture becomes only the setting for, and the coordination of, a score of arts and handicrafts. The cathedrals and the churches of the rest of Europe, devastated as they have been by one pestilence after another, are bare, empty and cold, but the churches of Spain still glow with all the splendor of all the arts. Of course Spain has suffered, chiefly through the savage invasions from time to time of the French, who are still known in the peninsula as "the northern barbarians." What England did to France during the Hundred Years war and Germany perpetrated during the World war, has been more than duplicated in Spain by the French themselves, but war and invasion have never destroyed religious art as this has been wrecked, ruined and devastated by religious, political and archeological fanaticism. So the churches of Spain still remain the best existing examples of what the Christian arts accomplished under a splendid stimulus and in a unity of action that has not existed since.

It's a Sweet Old World.

The other day the Woman came down from Milwaukee. The boy who sells things on the train was amusing. He first called: "Sweet, delicious almond bars" ("al" pronounced as in Al Smith). Then he shouted: "California (no 'r') sweet, delicious figs." Next he came with "Sweet, delicious peanuts and candies of all kinds." And so full of a number of "sweet, delicious" things was the poor old world becoming that the Woman fully expected to hear him announce in his optimism, "Sweet, delicious Life and Smart Set!" He didn't however. He merely called them "new."—Chicago Journal.

Good Eating and the Love Match

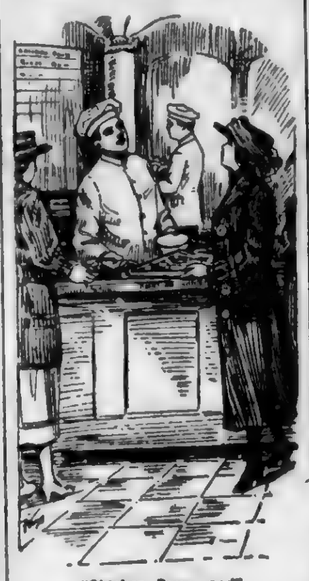
By CLARISSA MACKIE

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Jean watched the door of her father's library, a shadow clouding the serenity of her wide gray eyes. Bob had been in there a whole hour, closeted with Silas Worth, millionaire manufacturer—his errand was to ask for Jean's hand in marriage. She had been listening to the bass murmur of their voices—now it stopped suddenly. She heard one or two sentences, and then the library door opened and closed, and Bob Dacre walked briskly through the hall, past the living room where she waited expectantly, and out of the house!

"Without one word!" she gasped, drawing back from the window as he ran down the steps and swung down the path to the gate. He held his head high, and he whistled as he went—without one backward glance.



The library door opened and her father crossed the hall and came to her, a quizzical look in his eyes. Jean blushed hotly.

"Well?" she asked.

He waved his hand. "Gone. Plucky beggar, too. Said he came to ask my consent to your marriage—said he could earn some kind of a living—and that if you were the right kind of a girl—the kind he thought you were, that you'd want to help him build. I offered him a position in the works—fine chance for advancement, but he turned it down. Said he wanted to be a self-made man, that he wasn't hiring out as a son-in-law. Ha! Ha!" He laughed reminiscently.

"Wh—what did you think of him, daddy?"

"Spunky—liked his independence—we will hear of him some day, Jeanie.

"Chicken Soup—and"

Told me of his people—good family, little money, and out of luck. Is alone in the world, and bound to succeed. Let him try—in the meantime you had better play about awhile—your Aunt Louise is going to Europe and will take you along with her—better go."

"Very well, daddy," said Jeanie, and he did not see the flame that smoldered in her eyes. So Bob had flung away without wanting to see her again; two could play at that game, she thought, as she went to the telephone to call her aunt. She loved Bob dearly and would gladly have married him, if he had only consented to accept a little help from her father—just a start in life. The years of the war had left Bob Dacre physically whole and sound, but his job had been filled. The clamor of battle still assailed his ears and he could not settle down to anything new, and there were few openings.

Although Jean Worth watched and waited during the days of her preparation, she sailed away without one word of explanation from Bob Dacre. She was too proud to let him know of her ailing.

"I will forget him," she declared passionately.

But she did not—could not, when she visited the devastated regions of France and Belgium—saw the battlefields where Bob and his comrades had fought—when she wept over the poppy-fields of Flanders where her playmates and friends had laid down their lives—and when summer waned she returned to her own home, serene-eyed, grave and less selfish.

"I want work to do, daddy. I am tired of being idle and good-for-nothing!"

"You could never be good for nothing when you brighten all my days," he told her, as he took his motherless girl in his arms.

But Jean fretted. She refused all invitations, read a great deal and took solitary walks.

"Hang his pride!" blurted out Silas Worth in the solitude of his study. "This is the limit!" So he stamped down the hall to his daughter and eyed her sternly. "You look pale, Jeanie. Get some things together—I am going down to the works in the car; we shall stay a few days and you can board with Mrs. Lawrence."

"Mercy—you don't want me on a business trip!"

"We will make it into a pleasure jaunt—you may drive all the way. We can leave Sellers at home."

* * * * * * *

It was a cold October morning when the big car of Silas Worth drew up in the driveway of the great factory; here were carefully kept lawns and shrubbery and the remains of blooming flower beds. The brick walls of the various buildings were clothed in ivy. There was a sharp pungent smell of chrysanthemums and a fleeting fragrance of some late roses.

"You have made some changes since I was here last winter," said Jean. "It must have been beautiful here during the summer."

"It was," he said briefly.

"You have built a new restaurant—isn't it pretty?" Jean pointed across the inclosure to a small red brick bungalow, smothered in woodbine, where a sign swung to and fro. "Good Eating," read the signboard.

"That's not the factory restaurant—new chap came along and rented that little building and has opened a cafeteria—we have had to close our lunchroom, didn't pay. Said his mother was an invalid and he had learned to cook when a boy—has some housewives about here to help. Better go over there and get your lunch—I will come over later; I have to see Ferguson first."

Jean walked slowly to the cafeteria. A few men and girls were going in, people from the offices, for the factory whistle had not sounded the noon hour. Inside it was clean and cheery, with painted floor and tables and chairs, with pots of red geraniums in the window. Jean picked up a tray, with the necessary silver, and approached the open space where a line was formed.

Jean studied the bill of fare on the wall in front of her.

"Chicken soup and—" Jean stared at the white-clad young man who was standing with soup ladle poised in air. How big and hearty he looked, how clean, and wholesome and happy in the humble business of feeding hungry people. He smiled and bowed to Jean, while a red flush struggled through the tan of his skin. She went to a distant table and tried to eat, but listening to the sound of his cheery voice as he greeted one after another, she fell to dreaming, and when her father appeared the soup was cold and forgotten. Silas Worth brought a heavily-laden tray and with him came the young proprietor to bend above the secluded table.

"I just saw Jean, sir—it's taken my breath away, Mr. Worth—and if she won't marry me—as I am—making money—why I will sell the place out to you and leave the country."

Silas Worth lifted twinkling eyes. "Jeanie, this young man needs more help in his business—a pretty wife to help him spend the proceeds; so if you could manage to make your home in the old manor house, and keep a corner for me, when I give up the town office—why, we'll call it a day. My lunch is getting cold!"

No one in the busy place enjoying the "good eating" saw Bob Dacre's swift downward swoop as he dropped a kiss on Jeanie's bright hair.

The Innocent Little Thing

By JESSIE DOUGLAS

(©, 1918, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"We're about the same age, aren't we, Anice?"

"Yes," Anice James answered lightly.

She sat on the lowest step of her own veranda, her hands clasped about her knees.

Robert Hunnewell, turning to look at her, said with a laugh, "You look charming, my dear!"

"What is it, Bob? Do you want to ask my advice?"

He frowned and Anice saw his dark brows come together. How well she knew every lineament of that face, the brown laughing eyes, the steady mouth, the skin almost blue-black on the chin.

"I was just thinking," he went on, "what a pull you have had of it. How you had to give up school when your father died, to take care of your mother. And how well you've done it! I should think you'd feel proud at times when you think all you have done for yourself."

"Sometimes I only feel sorry," she said suddenly. "All I've missed. I never could burn the candle at both ends. It's been nothing but work, work, work."

"I know what you mean, Anice. All that lovely bloom is brushed off. You see men as they are. You've had to knock up against things; you've lost your illusions!"

She did not answer him.

The silver starlight showed her face white and soft, with pools of shadow where her eyes were and a slim white column of throat.

"Not That I Ever Care to Smoke."

"That's the way I feel, too," he went on as though he were thinking aloud. "There's only one way to get back those illusions. That's to fall in love."

Her hands closed tighter on each other. Her lashes lifted and she looked at him. He did not even see her.

"When I do fall in love I want some innocent little thing who still has rainbow hopes and believes that dreams come true. I'll have enough sophistication for two."

"Who is she?" was on Anice's lips, but she caught back the words.

She rose suddenly.

"I am tired tonight," she said in a detached voice. "I'm sorry, Robert, but tomorrow is going to be a hard day."

She held out her hand and as he clasped it she drew it from his fingers.

"I—there's a girl, Anice, I wish you could meet her. Could I bring her to see you?"

"Why, of course, Bob. Why don't you both come to tea tomorrow afternoon?" she asked cordially. "It's Saturday, you know."

She did not watch him open the gate; she went quickly inside and standing there put her two hands over her face for a moment as though she could not bear the thoughts.

Anice hurried home from the office next afternoon to get everything ready for her guests. She had brought some yellow roses and some cakes, and as she began cutting wafer-thin slices of bread for the sandwiches her mother came into the kitchen.

"You said Robert was coming with some girl?" she asked. "Why, I thought, Anice, dear—"

"Don't think, mother!" Anice smiled.

But Mrs. James saw the hurt beneath that smile.

"I have an idea it's that little Hale girl who's visiting here. She's just out of a convent and scarcely nineteen. I've heard she's very pretty."

She was very pretty. As Anice rose to greet her guest she saw in a glance the innocent blue eyes and pouting mouth, the fluff of hair beneath a drooping, flower-laden hat.

Anice herself felt suddenly very old and very disillusioned. She did not know that her own green organdie seemed like the sheath of a lily bud to her white face with its dark wide eyes. In Robert Hunnewell's face Anice read a new enthusiasm, a certain proprietary manner, as he spoke to little Dolly Hale.

"How sweet of you to ask me," Miss Hall lisped. "Every one is so sweet in this little town. It's such a relief to get away from the constant whirl of New York."

"But I thought you just left the convent?" Anice asked as she added tinkling ice to the tall glasses of tea.

"Oh, geth, the convent," Dolly lisped. "They're so strict, you know, we had to stuff our keyhole when we smoked."

She glanced up to see the rather crestfallen look on her Robert's face. She changed at once.

"Not that I ever care to smoke," she said softly.

Robert smiled across at Anice. His eyes said, "What did I tell you? Isn't she innocent?"

The tea progressed. Dolly lisped on and showed the dimple in her smooth cheek and the utter innocence of her blue eyes. Her two listeners gave her their flattering attention, although Anice from her place behind the tea table had her own opinion.

It was in the middle of one of Dolly's dialogues about their convent life that Robert sprang up.

"I say, if you'll excuse me a few minutes, I've got to 'phone a man about an appointment." He left them.

Dolly crossed her legs and swept her hands above her head.

"Isn't he a scream, my dear? I could howl. With all that old reverence stuff and chivalry toward women just sticking out of his manner—"

"I rather like his manner," Anice said coldly.

Dolly opened her eyes.

"How you can stick it! Why, he hasn't any more 'go'! Haven't you a fag, my dear? I'll die if I can't have a smoke. I'm so sick of this 'convent stuff,' but all the men fall for it."

She drew out her lipstick and began to apply a little French rouge to her already bow-shaped lips.

Robert returned in about half an hour and explained that he'd have to leave. He and Dolly slipped away and Anice saw that Dolly had resumed her lisp and her appealing innocence.

She was rather surprised that evening when some one came hurriedly up the walk. She saw with dismay that her caller was Robert Hunnewell, but she rose and held out her hand.

"She is pretty, Bob; just as pretty as you said she was!"

"I never said she was pretty!" he said belligerently. "Is this some conspiracy, Anice? Do you think I'm blind? Why, she's nothing but a shallow little gold-digger, and I know it. What do you mean by taking her part?"

"But—but I thought," she faltered.

"Don't think. I heard what she said when I was supposed to have gone out of the room. I lost my hat in the hall and heard her voice. My dear, I've been a blind fool. Can you ever forgive me? Can you believe that I didn't know, wouldn't know what I'd lost if it hadn't been for this little fluff? Oh, Anice, tell me that I've got a chance with you!"

Her eyes, lifted to his, gave him his answer.

DROVE PEPYS TO TOBACCO

Diarist Recorded How Sight of Stricken Abodes During Great Plague Affected Him.

While the great plague raged in London tobacco was recommended by the faculty and generally taken as a preventive against infection. Pepys records the following on June 7, 1665, the Detroit News recalls:

"The hottest day that I ever felt in my life. This day, much against my will, I did in Drury lane see two or three houses marked with a red cross upon the doors, and, 'Lord have mercy upon us!' writ there; which was a sight to me, being the first of the kind, to my remembrance, I ever saw. It puts me into an ill conception of myself and my smell, so that I was forced to buy some roll tobacco and chew, which took away the apprehension."

Further, it was popularly reported that no tobacconists or their households were afflicted by the plague. Physicians who visited the sick took tobacco very freely; the men who went around with the dead carts had their pipes continually alight. This gave tobacco a new popularity and it took the high medical position accorded to it by the physicians of the French court.

Link With Dickens.

The oldest inhabitant of the Wiltshire (England) village of Pickwick, Mrs. Arundel, celebrated her one hundredth birthday recently, according to the Westminster Gazette.

She was a girl when Dickens, who frequently drove through the village on his visits to Bath, chose its name for his immortal character. The original of Sam Weller is said to have been ostler of an inn in the village where Dickens put up.

Hated.

"Is your new efficiency expert getting results?"

"I judge so."

"Yes?"

"If he were to drop dead at the present moment you couldn't collect 50 cents among the office help to buy flowers."

New York Birds.

Many species of birds are to be found within 50 miles of New York. At the Museum of Natural History there is a special collection of such birds, and they are more numerous and diversified than is generally supposed.

Screech owls, one of the smallest and commonest of owls of eastern North America, are among them. The owl's peculiar quavering notes may often be heard on moonlight nights in the country and where there are trees in town. It nests in hollow trees, either in the orchard or forest, and lays four to six white eggs, usually in April in the latitude of New York. It also nests freely in bird boxes. The present species is remarkable for being dichromatic, presenting two phases of plumage—the one gray, the other red, irrespective of sex, age or season

Preacher Runs Fifteen-Acre Farm.

Mentone, Ind.—Preachers should do manual labor, according to Rev. A. J. Bachman, pastor of the Church of Christ here. This summer he farmed a 15-acre tract, and also followed his former trade, that of a carpenter. The other day he started on his annual vacation, which will be passed conducting a revival campaign of five weeks in Pennsylvania.

Nut Pudding.

One cupful soft bread crumbs, 2 cupfuls scalded milk, 1 tablespoonful shortening, 1 cupful chopped nuts, 1 cupful chopped seeded raisins, ½ teaspoonful salt, 2 egg yolks, ½ cupful sugar, juice and grated rind of 1 lemon, 2 stiffly beaten egg whites.

Mix bread crumbs, milk, shortening, nuts, salt, egg yolks, sugar, juice and rind of lemon. When well blended, add raisins and mix thoroughly then fold in whites of eggs; pour into buttered individual molds; bake 20 to 30 minutes. Serve hot with cream.

Of Interest to People on the the Hilltop and Vicinity

Vol. 6. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, November 23, 1922. No. 38

The Hilltop Record.

Dear Sir: Last week, there appeared in the Record an article on "Boys" that was really an injustice to the many good boys of the community. There was an attempt made to make it appear that boys as a rule did not amount to very much and were responsible for almost any kind of unmanly act. This might be some people's conception of the boy, but one who puts valuable time in voluntary service with boys finds that there are plenty of good honest, upright boys. The percentage of unprincipled boys is very small as compared with the amount of good ones, and at that those who are guilty of the mean tricks and pranks are usually led on by some one else—generally older than themselves. I honestly believe that the Record owes all the boys of the Hilltop an apology for the general remarks made against them. This can easily be done by you, and inasmuch as a Scout Troop has undertaken a big job to prove their worth in the community I am going to suggest that you insert the enclosed article in the next issue of the Record.

There is a movement among boys, the purpose of which is to uplift the boys, to develop character and make better citizens. The Boy Scout Movement is the organization that is making the men to run our government tomorrow. To be a real Boy Scout, a boy cannot be of the "roughneck" class as outlined in last week's issue. We have four flourishing troops of Boy Scouts on the hill, all connected with some Church. There are two loyal men for each troop giving many hours of service without a cent of compensation. A Scout can always be trusted to do the right thing, and there are plenty of good boys left after the scout roll is called. Troop 21 of Hoge Memorial Church has volunteered to raise a large sum toward the new building, which will be a benefit to religious and recreational work. Real bad boys, and unprincipled boys do not help to build churches. According to the rules a Scout is not permitted to solicit funds for his own use. This troop is planning an entertainment for young and old, on December 8th, the funds from which will be used toward their pledge for the new building.

XXX

In response, we think Mr. Scout Master, you must have read that article in a hurry. But since you do recognize that there is a "roughneck" class among the boys, and say that "real bad boys, and unprincipled ones do not help to build churches," etc., and that kind of boys are not numbered with the Boy Scouts, we believe we are not very far apart in our opinions about boys. Our "hats are off" to the Boy Scout organizations and all good respectable, honest boys, whether they be Jew or Gentile, black or white; and while we cannot and will not "salve" a boy up—when he is not "trotting square" with those who trust him, yet that's no one in this "neck-o-the-woods" more ready and willing than we to hold out a hopeful and helpful hand to such a boy and not only try to steer him along such right principles as the Boy Scout organization teaches, but also, to try and get him turned toward the One who "Cleaneth from all sin." The Hilltop is blessed with thousands of good girls and boys, and we are proud of them.

On Friday evening, November 24th, the Junior Queen Esthers will present at Glenwood Church the Dyer Duo in a Musical and Dramatic program. The Duo consists of Miss Florence Dyer, a Junior at Ohio State University and Miss Dorothy Dyer, director of Dramatics at Highland Junior High School. Among the numbers presented by the Dyer sisters will be vocal and instrumental numbers, novelty musical selections, dramatics, readings in costume, and Italian dialect with piana-accordeon. Between the first and second part of the program the Queen Esthers will pantomime Indian songs in costume. The program starts at 8 o'clock with 15c and 25c admission. Let's plan to come early.

Ethel Marie Walcutt, 44 S. Wheatland Ave., pupil of Robbins and Greiser School of Elocution will give a number of readings at the "Homecoming at North Congregational Church, Friday evening, November 24.

Pelican Pecks

1st Peck—We went to the first number of the Glenwood Redpath Lyceum Course the other night. Five big numbers they are giving for a dollar. Why not make this a real community venture into which all may enter alike? It's worth every cent you pay for it.

2nd Peck—Did you ever sit beside a man on the street-car whose main business between home and work and work and home was to chew tobacco and emit saliva and tobacco into the slot into which the car-window slips? We have, and we remembered the children who climb up on the seat put their chubby little hand on that same spot and put the same germ-gathering hands into their mouth. It isn't pleasant is it? Such men must have been raised in a barn—and if you look hard at them you will see DONKEY written all over their external physiognomy. STOP IT!! If you can't the LAW can!

3rd Peck—Why not revive that broken plan of having cars stop at every other corner—the Skip-Stop Plan? It would save almost half the time between here and the Capitol. Councilmen, what do you say?

4th Peck—Doesn't some enterprising merchant want to start a Men's Clothing Shop on the Hilltop? Ready-to-wear clothing at reasonable price ought to make a hit out here.

5th Peck—The Chamber of Commerce is one of the finest moves made by Hilltop merchants ever. Why not try a "Trade on the Hilltop" movement with some real effort in it and some real advantages from the people's standpoint in it? You merchants need not kick if people go downtown to buy when oftimes you charge more here on the hill where rents are cheaper than they charge downtown.

6th Peck—Say, men when is the Library due? Don't let the belt slip yet. Keep it coming.

7th Peck—The best cure for that dishonest boy is to put him in a good Boy Scout Troop of which there are several on the Hilltop. Scouts are honest!

THE PELICAN.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Miller, 103 S. Oakley, November 16, a boy.

Publisher Record—The writer in last week's "Pelican Pecks" said, "Did you ever notice how our Hilltop merchants stick together? Neither did we?" Well, on the other hand, if some should say we stuck together there would be howls go up that we were doing it to boost prices, etc.

The Hilltop Record will be published next week on Wednesday instead of Thursday, Thanksgiving Day. All copy must be in by eleven-thirty Tuesday; and in the outlying boxes not later than nine-thirty Tuesday morning.

HIGHLAND SCHOOL NOTES

A new flag pole has been erected on our school grounds in front of the building. The Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts have volunteered to raise and lower the flag each day, and will thus make a little ceremony out of it.

Report cards will be given out to the pupils again next Monday. These should be signed by the parents and returned to school immediately.

Mrs. Ryan has resigned as President of the Parent-Teacher Association. No successor has yet been elected.

The school is beginning to plan for an operetta which will probably be given soon after the holiday vacation.

An experiment is being conducted in spelling under the supervision of the Department of Educational Research of Ohio State University. It has long been thought that a study of Latin is a great help to a pupil in his English, but this has never been definitely proved. This experiment is being conducted in a way to furnish proof of the truth or falsity of this supposition. The experiment will require very little school time and will run throughout the rest of the school year.

The Guard of Honor for this week in West Broad St. School is four 4-A pupils: Robert Byerly, Fred Williams, Elizabeth Johnston, Sue Peart.

The following story was written by a 4-A pupil in West Broad St. School.

DAVID JACKSON

A steamer was leaving the harbor; David Jackson was leaving with it. They started amid the cheers of a great crowd. When about fifteen miles from the harbor the steamer sprung a leak, and then caught fire. The men put out the lifeboats and tried to save themselves, the women and children aboard. The fire spread swiftly, so swiftly that many of the men had a hard time to get off the ship. The men fought the fire bravely but the fire had a good start and the men had no chance. Many were burned to death; others were badly burned and died, but David was not among the ones who were killed and badly burned, he escaped unharmed in one of the lifeboats.

At last the vessel began to sink. Lower, and lower it sank, until only the stern of it was above water, but most of the men died from the fire. There were five thousand people aboard the steamer. Three thousand, five hundred came back.

One day David's little sister was playing in a boat and she did not notice that the tide was carrying her out to sea. Suddenly David came running from the cottage. He had seen his little sister being carried farther and farther away from shore; he jumped into a canoe and pushed off. His sister was aware of the perilous position she was in. David paddled with all his might 'till he came along side of her boat.

At that instant, the waves being very strong, overturned her boat. David dived and met his sister coming up. Instantly he gripped her with one hand, while he swam with the other straight for the shore. He swam taking care to avoid his sister's outstretched hand.

Closer, and closer to the shore he came, until at last his feet touched bottom. Then he waded ashore. He hardly realized that he had saved his sister's life; she was gasping for breath. Her mother took her to the cottage.

It was at sunrise when David awoke, quickly dressing, for he had planned a fishing trip. He ate his breakfast with a rush. He ran outside the cottage and pushed off the shore. He reached a place where there were a great many fish; tossed his hook into the water, when the cork went under like a flash. David gave a pull; it was a hard time he had to get the fish out of the water but when he did he thought it well worth his trouble for the fish he saw before him was an enormous channel cat almost as big as a man. David took him home after cutting off his head, for he had no wish for his hand to be torn by those great teeth. To the surprise of every one, he took the catfish out of the bag. His mother skinned it and they had a part of it for Sunday dinner and every one declared David a fine fisherman.

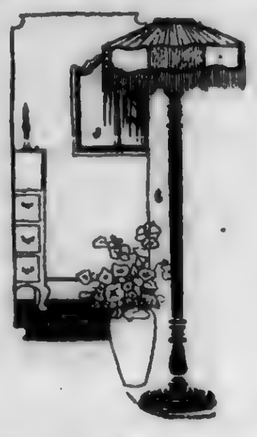
This picture shows Miss Geneva Swartzel, registered nurse of The Elisabeth Home, corner Patterson Avenue and Williams Street, with a double armful of babies, none of them being more than a few days old. This picture was taken on the front porch of the home this fall and represents only a few of the babies that are being cared for at the Home. During the past year forty-one babies have been born in the Home and fifty-one girls cared for. Many of the girls are without a home, which means that the Elisabeth Home is called upon to shelter and care for the girl and in many instances provide clothing for mother and child as well. In each instance suitable employment is found for the girl which will provide support for both she and the child.



A campaign was launched on November 14th and will extend over a period until January 1st with a goal of $15,000.00 and the public is urged to contribute to this campaign in order that the property recently purchased by the Home can be cleared of debt and the dormitory on the third floor equipped to care for at least eighteen more girls, which will more than double the capacity of the Home at present. The subscriptions may either be phoned in or mailed to Milton J. Mench, President and Treasurer, 1462 North High Street. Those who desire to assist in this campaign can either telephone Mr. Mench at North 5318 or Citizen 16748 or Miss Emma E. Sawyer, Field Secretary at North 8574.

LOSE 36 PC. OF CORN

Only 64 Bushels of Every 100 Possible Are Realized.

One Out of Every Three Acres Planted Does Not Produce Grain, Agricultural Experts Say—Various Causes Given.

Washington.—Of every 100 bushels of corn that farmers set out to grow, only 64 bushels are realized, according to figures compiled by the United States Department of Agriculture over a period of 13 years. The difference between the potential crop and the quantity harvested is due to weather conditions, defective seed, plant diseases and insect and animal pests. For every bushel of corn harvested, somewhat over one half bushel fails to reach harvest.

Were it not for the elements that tend to reduce the size of the crop, the average crop for the 13-year period would have been about 4,374,000,000 bushels, instead of the 2,805,000,000 bushels actually harvested, provided the same acreage had been planted.

The department points out, however, that if these elements did not exist and corn growers were certain of 100 per cent results, the corn acreage probably would have been greatly reduced, so that the final outturn might not have been a larger crop than that actually harvested. It would mean simply that the farmer could get from two acres the crop he now harvests from three.

The largest potential corn crop was one of about 5,000,000,000 bushels in 1917, although the actual harvest of 3,065,000,000 bushels in that year was exceeded in the three years 1912, 1920 and 1921, the largest harvested crop being 3,209,000,000 bushels in 1920.

A large crop of corn is due to a relatively low prevention of production by the many causes by which it is limited, but of course production is also related to acreage, the department records show.

During the 13 years the lowest degree of prevention was 28.5 per cent of a potential crop in 1920, and the highest was 44.5 per cent in 1918. Within the period covered, from about one-fourth to nearly one-half of a potential production has failed to be realized. The average is a little more than one-third.

GETS $20,000 FOR SAVING LIFE

Sea Captain Rewarded for Heroic Deed Performed Thirteen Years Ago.

New Brunswick, N. J.—Capt. John W. Vanderveer has just learned that to him has been left the $20,000 estate of Patrick Lang of Atlantic Highlands as a reward for saving Lang's life 13 years ago. The estate was willed originally to Mrs. Lang, with the proviso that at her death it should go to Vanderveer. Mrs. Lang died only a short time ago.

Lang was rescued by Vanderveer in September, 1909, off the rocks at Port Monmouth, N. J. Lang was one of five passengers in a motorboat returning from a fishing trip off the Highlands. Captain Vanderveer, standing nearby in his motorboat, saw the peril. Two of the men were saved by other fishermen, and Captain Vanderveer plunged into the sea and got Lang safely to his craft. The others were drowned.

WOMAN VICTIM OF HYPNOTIC CROOK

Forced to Wed Desperate Criminal and Then Keep Him Supplied With Money.

UNDER INFLUENCE 7 YEARS

Woman Arrested for Embezzlement Tells Omaha Police Remarkable Story—Often Escaped Only to Be Caught Again.

Omaha, Neb.—A hypnotic victim of a desperate criminal for seven years, during which she claims she was forced to marry the hypnotist, to steal money from her employers and give it to her master and otherwise cater to him, was the remarkable story told the Omaha police by Miss Emma Uhler of Omaha when she was arrested for embezzlement.

She obtained her freedom from the hypnotic criminal only when he was thrown into the Missouri river by several of his cronies, whom he had "double-crossed," Miss Uhler said. The Omaha police don't know whether or not to believe the story, but are investigating the strange case.

Time after time she escaped from the hypnotist, she said, and went to other cities, only be traced by her master and brought back to bondage and to work.

Miss Uhler was a bookkeeper at one of the big stores of Omaha. She was accused of taking company funds.

Pursued by Gangster.

According to the story told by the girl, she discovered ten years ago that the man and woman she had looked upon as her parents were not related to her at all, and that she was an orphan. She thereupon left home and went out, at the age of seventeen, to make her own way. Three years later she met the gangster, who followed her from city to city and forced her to supply him with money.

"It was in Minneapolis," Miss Uhler told the police, "that I first met him. That was seven years ago, when I was twenty. I was in the public library. In the most casual way, while handling a book, he spoke to me. We discussed the book. He was fascinating, so much so that before I knew it I had made a date with him for the next evening. We went to a theater and to a cafe. He induced me to take a drink, something I had never done before. I didn't know anything else until the next morning when I awoke in a hotel.

"Hello, wifey," said Lou, coming into my room. Lou was his name. He told me we had been married the night before.

"That was the start of the affair. He told me he was wanted by the police and that, for the present, we must keep our marriage a secret. So I went back to work."

From then on, for seven years, the gangster kept the girl under his influence, she told the police. He forced her to give him money, and when her salary was not sufficient for his needs, he forced her to steal or embezzle from her employers. At times she rebelled and escaped, but always he found her again.

"Through his hypnotic influence, and through fear which he instilled into my mind, I had to do his bidding," said Miss Uhler.

"He told me he had killed three people," she said. "One night he came to me with a lot of blood on his clothes and face. He said he had killed a man that night. That was in Kansas City."

From Minneapolis Miss Uhler ran away and went to Chicago, where she obtained work. Three months later she met "Lou" on the street, she said, and he re-established his old influence over her, and forced her to give him money.

Forces Her to Give Checks.

"After escaping from him two or three other times, I came to Omaha and went to work," Miss Uhler said. "Months passed, and I thought I had lost him completely. But one day last spring, going to the post office with letters and checks, I met him. He made me give him the checks, which I later made good to the firm.

"Some time in August he disappeared, but that was not unusual, as he often did not show up for weeks at a time. One day I met one of his friends on the street. He told me they had thrown Lou into the Mississippi river because he had double-crossed them. I have never seen him nor heard of him since."

By that time Miss Uhler was so deeply indebted to the firm because of money she had taken that she had lost hope of ever catching up and repaying it without her employers discovering the embezzlement.

"I started to commit suicide," she said. "Then I changed my mind and took the train away."

After her departure her accounts were checked and the defalcation discovered. Her arrest followed.

"It's the weirdest story I ever heard," said Captain Van Dousa, [illegible]

ETHER AND ICE CREAM

Ether has been adapted to a new role of usefulness by P. N. Peter, chemist of the dairy division of the United States Department of Agriculture. Mr. Peter recently discovered its value as an agent in determining the expansion in force when freezing ice cream. It is the first time that ether has been applied in the process of refrigeration. The apparatus consists of a large Dewar flask wrapped in heavy felt.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Wisconsin, second state in the Union in cabbage production, will turn out 155,000 tons of sauer kraut this fall, according to the estimate of Joseph A. Becker, crop reporting service. Last year's kraut shortage was the result of a meager harvest of 57,000 tons of cabbage.

The fragrant onion has also bloomed and Mr. Becker imparts to the enthusiast that a great harvest of 407,000 bushels is expected, compared to 100,000 bushels last year.

Third ranking state in potatoes, Wisconsin will have 37,458,000 bushels, compared to a five-year average of 28,751,000 bushels.

Quadruplets Are Born.

Braddock, Pa.—Mrs. Mary Krikorian gave birth to quadruplets at her home here recently. One of the babies died shortly after it was born. The others were rushed to a hospital. All of them died. The combined weight of the infants—all girls—was nineteen pounds.

ESCAPES SMYRNA, TELLS OF FIRE

Greek, Saved by American Sailors, Saw His Parents Killed by Turks.

COMES HERE AS STOWAWAY

Band of Cutthroats Fire Buildings That Were Not Already Burning and Kill Inhabitants and Loot Houses.

New York.—Constandinos Skatziris, a Greek, twenty-seven, a refugee from Smyrna, saved by sailors from the United States destroyer Litchfield, arrived here from Naples as a stowaway on the steamship Guglielmo Peirce. He told immigration inspectors that his parents had been slain before his eyes, but that his sister, whose whereabouts he does not know, had been saved.

Skatziris said that he had kept a small grocery store in the Greek section of Smyrna near the plague hospital. On October 16, three days after the town had been fired, a Turkish bandit, a giant in stature who had been a hamel, or porter, on the customs quay before the war and who had acquired fame as a wrestler, had entered Smyrna at the head of a band of cutthroats and had set fire to any buildings that were not burning. Then they had started to kill the inhabitants and loot houses.

Father and Mother Killed.

"They rushed into my store in the forenoon," said the stowaway, "brandishing long, broad-bladed knives, and attacked my father and mother and my brother Thomas, who were trying to keep the Turkish robbers from taking goods. My parents were killed. One bandit seized my sister Katherina and bore her away on his shoulders. I pursued him while my brother fought desperately in a corner of the store.

"I searched everywhere for her. At last I was told she had been carried off by the brigands to their caves in the mountains back of Smyrna, where they had been hiding and preying on the country people since the Greek army had entered in the spring of 1921.

"After hiding all day, I went to the American consulate, where I found some naval officers and sailors from the destroyers in the harbor which were taking off the refugees to the steamships bound for Greece.

"I got to the waterfront with great difficulty, as the heat from the burning ruins was intense and the smoke from the tobacco warehouses was suffocating. Because the streets are very narrow in Smyrna it was impossible to pass down them. The flames had spread across from side to side, and the roadway was piled with debris.

Sailors Save Sister.

"At the custom house steps I met a boatman who knew my family. He told me that Katherina had been saved by sailors from the American destroyer, but could not inform me which steamship she had been taken to. There were fully 2,000 refugees, men, women and children, on the quay when I was there, five days after the fire started. The last news I had was that the American consulate had been fired by the Turkish bandits, or irregulars, as they were styled."

The stowaway said the Turks had not attempted to interfere with the Armenians, Greeks, Jews and other refugees when they had come under the protection of the American sailors, but that many had been killed in the streets before they could reach the waterfront. Their bodies had been thrown into the flames in order to hide all traces of the crimes committed by the invaders.

He said an Italian steamship had taken him to Brindisi. At Naples he had hidden away on the Guglielmo Peirce to get to America, where he says he has friends, although he does not know where they li[ve].

The Left-Over Doll

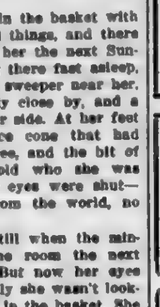
By Christopher G. Hazard

(©, 1923, Western Newspaper Union.)

WHAT was the left-over doll thinking about as she hung on the topmost twig of the Christmas tree all alone? Perhaps about all the other gifts that had been taken off by loving hands and given to the boys and girls. Maybe she was wondering whether there would be a Christmas tree every winter, bearing such nice fruit in such a strange season, if there had not been such a great gift from God as come on Jesus' birthday. More than all, however, she must have been asking herself why she was left over, why nobody wanted her, why the name that was pinned on her dress had not been called.

She was as good a doll as ever was made. Her eyes would open and shut, she always had a smile upon her face, her cheeks were rosy, she did not have a pug nose, and her dress was beautiful. When they put her on the tree she thought her name would be the very first one. She could hardly wait to hear it, and she wondered if they would never get through singing carols. Now it was all over and she wasn't wanted at all, not by anybody, not even by Sally Wiggins, who had no doll—not even one. She wasn't wanted! Oh, it was too bad, and her eyes tried to wink out two tears.

So they put her in the basket with the other unwanted things, and there the minister found her the next Sunday. She was lying there fast asleep, with a little carpet sweeper near her, and a box of candy close by, and a looking glass by her side. At her feet there was a spruce cone that had fallen off of the tree, and the bit of paper that had told who she was meant for, but her eyes were shut—she had retired from the world, no one wanted her.



There she was still when the minister came into the room the next Sunday morning. But now her eyes were wide open, only she wasn't looking at the presents in the basket. She was awake, but turned away, and still trying to squeeze out some tears because she was left over. And every time the minister took her up she would shut her eyes and go to sleep again, unless he held her up pretty straight, and then she seemed to be sad, and to be dreaming about being left over, even while she was awake.

She wasn't awake even on children's day until little baby Mower came in to get ready to be baptized, but as soon as he held her up she opened her eyes, and when she saw what a pleasant little boy he was she looked pleasant and hopeful again. Then he put her down, and she went to sleep and slept until Christmas came again!

With a new Christmas there she was upon [illegible] once more, and they [illegible] again and getting [illegible] names. This time [illegible] somebody would [illegible] had been patient a [illegible] she hadn't made any [illegible] she had felt so sorry, this was the very best [illegible] ever had, and so many [illegible] to see it. It was full of [illegible] like the little tree that the [illegible] saw in the corner of a house parlor—the mother said, "It's most all tree and paper, but it's a tree"—there were go-carts, and everything, and an Indian tomahawk to go with a boy's warwhoop, and some fringed pants to be put on with them, and a picture of a little girl in red, under a big umbrella, in a snowstorm, and "Ain't this a nice snowy day?" written under the picture, and lots of things, and the left-over doll, looking so friendly and nice—nicer than ever.

Well, they began to call the names, and almost the first thing somebody took down the left-over doll and gave her to Polly Rankin! Polly is just the dearest child I know. It was Polly who had said that she wished she had a doll to pet and bring up right. I am sure that Polly will do it. She will make the left-over doll feel very much wanted. She will teach her to be always cheerful. She will find her very obedient, and even nicer than she looks, and she will be kind to her. I hope that when the left-over doll is grown up she will be just like Polly!

"Santa Claus."

"Santa Claus" is a corruption which originated apparently in Flanders or possibly among the Dutch, of the name St. Nicholas, a saint noted for his love of children and his boundless charity. His "day" was perhaps December 8, originally, but since the displacement of Old Father Christmas, the British representation of the Christmas spirit, he is celebrated almost universally as the Christmas saint.

BELT CLASP STOPS BULLET

Saves Father's Life and Leads to Reconciliation of Family Long Estranged.

Louisville.—A family row at the home of Thomas L. Howe, Jr., twenty-four years old, 320 West Lee street, ended when Howe fired two shots from a revolver at his father, Thomas L. Howe, Sr., forty-nine.

The father collapsed, and it was supposed that he had been seriously wounded until the police arrived and found that one bullet had lodged in the wall and the elder Howe's belt buckle stopped the other.

The shock of his narrow escape was the only ill effect the father suffered, and the turn of events resulted in the apparent reconciliation of the family.

Michigan Man Makes Application for Alien's License and Discovers He Is Naturalized.

Kalamazoo, Mich.—An application for an alien's hunting permit revealed to Michael Schmidt of Augusta that he had been a citizen for four years. What he believed were his first papers were discovered by the county clerk to be his naturalization papers. The papers were issued to Schmidt during the war, his service in the army entitling him to immediate naturalization without the customary [illegible].

Helpful Hints for Hilltop Homes

Fudge—2 cups sugar, 1 cup of water, 2 level teaspoons baking powder, butter size of walnut, 2 tablespoons cocoa, vanilla to flavor. Mix sugar water, baking powder, butter and cocoa together, cook until forms a soft ball in water. Let stand until cold, then beat, pour into buttered pans and cut into squares.

ANNA NOWELL.

Now, that furnaces and coal heaters are being used great care should be taken to avoid fires from burning soot in the flues. With the scarcity of water, fires from such causes would prove a menace to any locality. Some chemical preparations are recommended for removing soot from chimney, which, used by a skilled operator would prove a "Safety First" protection. On bungalow and cottage buildings a fishing pole with burlap sacks tied on one end could be used to "sweep" the flues.

Pelican Pecks

The answer of the "Hilltop Merchant" last week was rather a weak excuse for not sticking together. He and others like him must have guilty consciences!

A penny in the collection often is a the character of a man.

Pelicans love snow. The first one of the winter brings back old memories to all of us, especially to those who love the way God made the seasons.

Now, councilmen, that the track laying, brick laying, concrete laying, etc., is all finished on West Broad, why not call the Cleaning Department and have them thoroughly brush up the dirt and muss?

The Skip-Stop Plan is the only sensible plan that was ever invented for street car service. For a block's time wasted in catching the car, you make at least ten minutes on the other end of the line.

Has anyone ever heard of the Protestant preachers sticking together on the Hilltop? If shyness is an index to co-operation, they have it!

The Catholic School on West Broad is crowded to the doors (so another Bird told the Pelican). Better improve such conditions or limit the attendance.

Doctors' offices are almost as frequent on West Broad as filling stations. But let's hope they don't give us scant measure. There, boys; don't get mad now.

These same doctors ought to get signs for human frailties as they have for contagious diseases. Almost every house would have a yellow sign, wouldn't it?

Tom Turkey is in town. He'll show them a tough time!

THE PELICAN.

An interesting entertainment was given under the auspices of the R. N. of A. at their lodge rooms on Nov. 23rd, by Elisabeth Marshall, child reader and impersonator, Mary Gaver, pianist; John Snyder, soloist, and Roger and Roland Dolder, violinist, and cornetist, were her accompanists. The Dolder brothers were former Hilltop residents.

On Thursday evening, November 23, a surprise party was given on Mr. and Mrs. Homer M. DeLong, 210 S. Terrace St., in honor of their first wedding anniversary. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. John Schleup, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. De Maris, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Judy, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Major and daughter Helen, Mr. and Mrs. John Beiber, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Schmeltzer and daughter Helen, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Erlenwein, Mrs. L. W. Johnson, Miss Elizabeth E. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Burt Loudenslager, and the host and hostess. Mr. and Mrs. DeLong received many beautiful presents. Lunch was served after which the guests departed at a late hour, wishing the happy couple many more such anniversarys.

Miss Gladys M. Shane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Shane of Lore City, and Mr.. Chester M. Chilcote, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Chilcote, 1575 E. Fourth Ave., were married at noon Saturday, November 25 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Frederick, 265 S. Harris Ave. Rev. Grimes officiated. The bride was attended by Miss Dorothy Frederick, and Mr. Stanley Chilcote served as best man for his brother. The bride's gown was fashioned of white satin with long French lace side panels, and trimmings of white satin roses. Miss Dorothy Frederick wore a gown of blue satin draped with changeable grenadine. Mr. Chilcote and his bride have started on a wedding trip to Detroit.

---

Mrs. Charles Moss, 146 N. Ogden Ave., was hostess Thursday afternoon at a luncheon honoring Miss Hilda Bopeley, organist at St. Alysius Church who is to be married next Thursday to Mr. Frank Sekoll of Wellsville, N. Y.. A musical program was given in the afternoon and Dorothy Louise Moss, pupil of the Wynters School of Expression gave readings. Covers were laid for Mrs. Edward Deints of Lima, Mrs. Harry Benedict, Mrs. R. Finneran, Mrs. Earl English, Mrs. Mark Dear, Mrs. Harry Steinham, Mrs. Joseph Bopeley, Miss Hilda Bopeley and Mrs. Charles Moss.

In celebration of their 32nd wedding anniversary Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Dougherty, 426 S. Eureka Ave., entertained a concourse of friends at their home on Thursday, Nov. 23. They were presented with a lovely shower bouquet, the colors of green, gold and white blending artistically. A patchwork quilt of the double X pattern, commenced by the hostess in their first year of married life was completed on that day by the ladies of the party.

In the evening members of their church fellowship met in humble worship to God. Rev. Welsh, Rev. Meyers and Elder Weate each in a few well chosen words paid tribute to the couple who have traveled so successfully and serenely along the past 32 years of wedded life. Friends on departing expressed their pleasure and enjoyment of the occasion wishing the host and hostess many returns of their wedding anniversary day.

Wishing to increase our subscription list and believing the children of the Hilltop are desirous of earning some extra money for their Christmas fund, beginning December 1st and continuing throughout the month the publisher of the Hilltop Record will extend to each boy and girl of the Hilltop between the age of seven and twenty the privilege of soliciting and collecting for new subscriptions to the Hilltop Record. Subscription rates will be 50 cents for one year, or 25 cents for six months, the paper to be delivered weekly by carrier. A commission of 50% will be given for each subscription, no recognition being given a subscription unless accompanied by the cash price.

Now, boys and girls, get busy, bring your subscriptions together with full name, address and telephone number (if any) of the subscriber to the Hilltop Record office (over Prior's Hardware Store) on Mondays and Fridays between 11:30 a. m. and 1:30 p. m. For further information call Hilltop 701 or 582.

"KILLED" SOLDIER IS GIVEN D. S. C.

Hero Reported Dead Is Decorated for Meritorious Service on Field of Battle.

LEFT ON FIELD FOR DEAD

Wounded Forty-Four Times in Attempting to Clean Out Machine Gun Nest at Chateau Thierry—Wife Insisted He Wasn't Dead.

Omaha, Neb.—Lieut. "Big Jim" Hanbery, formerly a teacher in Kansas Manual Training Normal at Pittsburg, Kan., who was "killed" at Chateau Thierry, and for whom funeral services and memorial exercises were held in Pittsburg, Tulsa and Enid, Okla., and several other places, was called before the commandant at Fort Crook and before 1,000 soldiers decorated with the distinguished service cross for meritorious service on the field of battle in France.

Before pinning the cross on his breast the commanding officer read to Hanbery a personal letter from General Pershing and another from Governor Allen of Kansas, each commending him for the service he had performed. Although he was officially "killed" at Chateau Thierry, Hanbery is now a newspaper reporter in Omaha.

Wounded Forty-Four Times.

Briefly, this was the service for which Hanbery was decorated:

At Chateau Thierry he undertook, with a platoon of men, to clean out a German machine gun nest. He was wounded 44 times, left for dead on the battlefield for 36 hours, crawled and rolled three miles to the American lines, spent many months in a hospital and today carries one bullet in his body and four pieces of a high-explosive shell in his head.

"Big Jim" (he stands six feet two inches in his bare feet) was teaching at Pittsburg when the war broke out. He didn't wait for the draft, but enlisted at once. He went through one of the training camps, was commissioned lieutenant and married to Miss Nellie Crane, teacher in the same school at Pittsburg. He was lieutenant of Company L, Fifty-ninth infantry, Fourth division, and in this capacity went to France.

The War department cabled his wife in Pittsburg and his parents in Enid of his "death." When the funeral services were arranged Mrs. Hanbery refused to attend.

"Jim is not dead," she insisted. Everybody pitied her. But she insisted "Jim is not dead."

Papers Played Up His Death.

Kansas and Oklahoma papers played up his "death."

"Big Jim's" family got all the clippings they could. They wanted to keep them to read in after years. Now "Big Jim" has them all nicely pasted in a scrapbook and can read his own obituary whenever he pleases. In addition to the clippings there are half a hundred telegrams of sympathy, the official notice from the War department and several soliciting letters from dealers in tombstones and monuments.

But Mrs. "Big Jim" insisted Jim was not dead.

One day a couple of months after "Big Jim's" funeral services, Mrs. Hanbery received a letter from Lieutenant Hanbery. He was all shot to pieces and in a hospital in France, but getting along pretty well.

"I told you Jim wasn't dead," was about her only comment.

In time Hanbery was brought back to the States, spent many months in a hospital and finally was well enough to get back to work. He came to Omaha and became a newspaper reporter.

And that's why he was called down to Fort Crook and in the presence of the entire garrison, officers of the Seventh army corps area, officers from Fort Omaha, members of the War Mothers, Overseas Girls and other patriotic organizations had pinned to his breast the bronze distinguished service cross.

Beggar Is Richer Than Judge.

New York.—Magistrate McGeehan sentenced Harry Sher, a mendicant, to 30 days in the workhouse, finding him guilty of begging in front of a local hotel.

"You have more money in the bank than I have," announced the magistrate, after a probation officer had reported Sher's savings as $1,000, with a quantity of miscellaneous cash found in his home and various pockets.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Wisconsin, second state in the Union in cabbage production, will turn out 155,000 tons of sauer kraut this fall, according to the estimate of Joseph A. Becker, crop reporting service. Last year's kraut shortage was the result of a meager harvest of 57,000 tons of cabbage.

The fragrant onion has also bloomed and Mr. Becker imparts to the enthusiast that a great harvest of 407,000 bushels is expected, compared to 100,000 bushels last year.

Third ranking state in potatoes, Wisconsin will have 37,453,000 bushels, compared to a five-year average of 28,751,000 bushels.

Quadruplets Are Born.

Braddock, Pa.—Mrs. Mary Krikorian gave birth to quadruplets at her home here recently. One of the babies died shortly after it was born. The others were rushed to a hospital. All of them died. The combined weight of the infants—all girls—was nineteen pounds.

Thirst Saved Life When Fireworks Plant Blew Up

Frank Danaise, owner of the Danaise Fireworks company, near Lorain, O., owes his life to his thirst. He left his one-story wooden factory building to go to a nearby house for a pail of water for drinking purposes. He was just 100 yards away when powder in the building exploded and blew the plant to atoms. The force of the explosion stunned Danaise, but he escaped injury. The cause of the explosion is unknown.

THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT

By Mary Graham Bonner

(©, 1923, Western Newspaper Union.)

ELLEN had been feeling that there was no such thing in the world as a Christmas spirit.

During the summer, for example, she had taken a trip. Everyone seemed to enjoy it. Everyone seemed to be glad to get away from the world with its scandals and its spoilt civilization. That was what everyone said as they took the trip through the simple wilds, remote and picturesque and old.

This seemed to be the life everyone longed for and then some one mentioned a scandal which had taken place nearby some months before.

With a dash everyone made for the scene—so they could tell the people back home that they had seen the locality of the scandal and Ellen had been disgusted. Was it such a sordid world after all?

Then she had taken some poor children to a big store to see the Christmas display and they had been refused admittance. The customers had objected to such crowds of children—they wanted to see the display themselves—why should poor children see the toys when they could only look? And all about the outside of the store were eager little faces peering into the windows and hoping that perhaps they could get in when the one who watched at the door was not looking. Once in a while one did and the children from outside waited for the news.

"What did you see? What did you see?" they shouted as the lucky one came out again.

Other stores had been different. Other stores had not had their rich customers complain. But it had saddened Ellen. And one of these very complainers had bought six copies of "The Christmas Carol" by Dickens to give away to friends. Ellen heard that later. It had not improved matters.

And on this same Christmas trip another she had met had said to her that these children had such shamefully poor coats and had reproved Ellen.

"I wish," the woman who had spoken so sharply to Ellen had said, "that they had some of the nice warm things belonging to my children," but when Ellen suggested that she should do something for these children she had gone off angrily.

And another person had patted her as she had seen her walking with these children and had said:

"A fine work, my dear."

And Ellen knew that the woman felt she had showed Christmas duty and Christmas service and Christmas love by making that speech.

But when Ellen began to see the trees which were sent to the city for Christmas she felt better. The smell of the trees gave her some of the Christmas spirit. Oh, yes, it was all right after all, she had been seeing only what was disagreeable and everything else had passed her by.

And then one day in the crowded section of the city she saw a small crippled newsboy go up to a Salvation army bucket and put in his donation. Helping others to have a Christmas dinner when he was none too sure of his own!

As she saw it she involuntarily smiled and a smile answered hers. A man was smiling at her.

Was some one going to be impertinent to her? Was the incident of the little boy only going to serve as an excuse for a man to smile at her?

But in another moment he was apologizing.

"I'm so sorry," he said. "I was trying to place you in my mind. I was so sure I knew you. And then I remembered that you were the picture of the girl on the cover of a magazine last Christmas which I saved all the year and so which is naturally very familiar to me. I am so sorry!"

And then Ellen laughed. For last year she had posed for one of her artist friends.

"I don't suppose you've any idea," the man continued, "how much good that picture did. I've heard so many speak of it and of the Christmas spirit it expressed. You fairly breathed it—then."

"And now I'm different?" she asked.

"You don't look just as—just as Christmasy," he faltered.

And Ellen felt ashamed. For she had been critical of others and in worrying about the world's shortcomings she had lost her own Christmas spirit. But it had been merely wandering—it was not utterly lost—and the man? The man who had found it again for her?

They became friends and then they became sweethearts and they made of their love a permanent thing and were married.

And he always called Ellen his beautiful Christmas picture. And Ellen was glad that he did. It kept constantly in mind the Christmas spirit that had once almost left her for good and all!

CENTURY AND QUARTER OLD

A battered old lock, hand made and bearing the inscription "General Post Office U. S. America 1798," recently came into the possession of the Post Office department and will be placed with other relics of the department in the Smithsonian institution. It was sent by the postmaster of Birmingham, Ala., who acquired it from an old darky who said his master had given it to him before the Civil war.

Helpful Hints for Hilltop Homes

After cleaning, a rug sometimes loses its shape or wrinkles and curls up because the sizing has worn off. Resizing can be satisfactorily and economically done at home by following these suggestions: Stretch the rug, face down, on a smooth floor and tack in position. Apply, with a brush, sparingly, a solution made by dissolving ¼ pound of flake glue in ½ gallon of water in a double boiler or a container surrounded by hot water. Or, a very thin paste, as used for papering walls, applied in the same manner will prove equally satisfactory.

Usually when linoleum is once laid it remains undisturbed until it is worn out; therefore particular care should be taken in laying it. In cold weather linoleum should be placed in a warm room for at least 2 days before it is unrolled. There are two ways of fastening linoleum to floors—tacking and cementing. The first is the simpler method and, as a rule, should only be tacked at the seams with staples leaving the borders free. In the second method the seams and edges are made water tight and is said to give longer service. Linoleum usually expands when laid on a floor therefore an allowance of ¼ to ½ inch should be made when fitting on the floor. Strong soap or cleansing powders containing alkali should never be used to clean linoleum. Waxing or varnishing improves the appearance and is said to make linoleum last longer. Wax should be used on inlaid and plain kinds, and varnish on printed ones, for wax sometimes tends to soften printed surfaces.

A "Taffy Pull" was held at the home of Miss Hilda Woerner, 78 N. Terrace Ave., on Wednesday, November 15th. During which Herb. Ault succeeded in burning his finger with hot taffy and then threw a handful of taffy in the air which came back down on his head. (Sticky mess). An enjoyable evening was had by all. Those present were, Martha McCloud, Mary Rhinehart, Margaret Alspach, Ruth Dixon, Virginia Anderson, Agnes Kinget, Edith Boyer, Cleo Keller, Herb. Cramer, Herb. Ault, Don Mitchell, Don McColly, David Matson, Devello Morriss, Dick Todhunter, Carl Johnson, Earl Boothe, Harold Stewart and the hostess. A guest.

The Lighted Candle
By Christopher G. Hazard

(©, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

"I'M SORRY for anyone who has to be out tonight," said Mrs. Gentle, as she drew down the window shades and stirred the hearth fire, shutting the light in and the darkness out and sending a host of sparks up the chimney to scare away the storm. The disappointed wind howled in its rage and shook the house, the snow whirled about and heaped itself up, the cold tried to get in at every crack and crevice, but Nelly and her mother were as snug and safe as any Christmas eve could wish to find them. The Christmas tree looked all ready for the youngsters who were fast asleep upstairs and dreaming about it, with its bundles and gilded balls it fairly twinkled in the firelight, like the star of hope that guided those wise people that brought their gifts to the Christ Child long ago.

"Mother," said Nelly, "this is as comfy as it can be with father away on the wild sea, but I don't quite like to have the outside of the house all dark; I like to think of friendly lighthouses when it storms and of our house as a kindly guide in the darkness."

"Well," answered her mother, "suppose we do as they did in that lovely story we read the other day, and put a candle in the window to guide the Christ Child through the storm, and you can hang up another stocking, in case he should come."

So the four stockings by the chimney corner became five, a shade was lifted a little to give a glimpse of the pleasant room, and the lighted candle sent its beams out into the stormy night, looking for any little wanderer who might be astray. The cheering rays played with the snowflakes and they seemed to feel invited in as they pressed upon the window panes.

While they sat there listening and looking, there came a step on the stair and there was Tommy, in his nightgown and peeking through the partly opened door. Failing to see Santa Claus, he was about to flee up to his room again, but Nelly caught him and said that he must sing them a song first, as a punishment for his curiosity. Tommy had just learned a new song, so he was willing enough, and this was it:

Five little brothers set out together
To journey the lifelong day;
In a curious carriage, all made of leather,
They hurried away, away.
One big brother and three quite small,
One wee fellow, no size at all.

The carriage was dark and not too roomy,
They could not move about;
The five little brothers grew quite gloomy,
The wee one began to pout,
Till the biggest one whispered,
"What do you say?
Let's leave the carriage and run away."

So off they scampered, the five together,
Far away they sped;
When somebody found the carriage of leather,
Oh, my! How she shook her head!
'Twas her little boy's shoes; as everyone knows,
The five little brothers were five little toes.

Then, with a bow, Tommy was off to his dreams again.

The fire was burning low and so was the candle, so it was time to go upstairs and get out of Santa's way, but just as Nelly and her mother were about to do so there came a little face up against the window pane and they heard a small voice, so faint that they could not know what it was saying. It took Nelly but a moment to throw open the door and bring the little stranger in, but it was longer than that before they could cuddle him up into comfort and warm his cold little toes. It was not until Christmas morning that the searchers found out where the little boy had wandered to, and when they came to Mrs. Gentle's house he was happily busy in opening his stocking, and did not want to go home. After he had gone away, with his stocking under his arm and candy marks all over his face, Nelly said, "Mother, I think there is a good deal of truth in that story about guiding the Christ Child to your house with a lighted candle."

MOOSE LIKES VIOLIN MUSIC

Becomes Friendly With Trapper and Listens, Belly-Deep in Stream, to Man's Pirving.

Duluth, Minn.—The tale of a strange friendship between a lonely trapper and a large bull moose through the common language of music has been brought back from the Stony river territory in northern Minnesota by Thomas Denley, chief forest ranger of that district.

Thirty-five miles from the nearest human habitation in the heart of the remote Stony river district lives Charley Lanie in a trapper's cabin, Denley relates.

Besides being one of the most successful trappers in the Minnesota wilderness, Lanie has ability with a violin bow and spends many of his evenings in the lonely woods playing old songs, favorites of years ago.

One of his most interested listeners is a large bull moose which comes to the river near the cabin and stands, belly deep in the water while it lifts its heavily antlered head toward the cabin and listens to the violin. When the concert is over, he turns and disappears in the woods.

Lanie has had numerous opportunities to shoot the animal, but the kindred appreciation of music has stayed his hand.

Now is the Time to Join Sulzberger's Christmas Club

Good taste and personality are truly expressed in the selection of jewelry. Personal adornment that befits each occasion is a mark of good breeding.

Jewelry, wisely chosen, is as proper after many years have passed as it is today. Regardless of money cost, its beauty is steadfast, its sentiment is enduring, and its intrinsic worth never dims. Your jeweler, with an offering of hundreds of inexpensive articles, will be glad to guide you in your selection.

Pelican Pecks

We wonder why Hilltop alleys are dirty and muddy and wretched? A family is known by the dust it sweeps under the closet!

To the Pelican:

Santa Claus is the most American institution we have. He will come this year by radio, I suppose, and bring plenty of well-chosen messages to cheer Hilltoppers' hearts. But remember, January, February and March are winter months and you may need coal. Don't let Santa get all the pennies!

We overheard
Two men talking
Heatedly
The other day,
And one said
"We don't need
A Library—
'Cause I wouldn't Read the books."
And we just sighed:
"SELFISHNESS."

Holiday traders ought to see the Hilltop stores first. Maybe you will save car fare and high prices. Try it anyhow.

THE PELICAN.

To "Mr. Pelican"

You are bright at times, but this time you have made a mistake. The Hilltop preachers are getting together. An organization, known as the Hilltop Ministerial Association, has been in existence for over a year and trying to do some worth-while things.

Two union Thanksgiving services have been held. Churches and people are becoming better acquainted. Ministers are meeting for occasional matters of intimate concern, and we believe the end is not yet.

The next time you hit, hit the bull's eye. You missed it a mile that time.

We are not sure you are right, either, about the merchants when you say they do not stick together. Better get some new ideas.

Yours, with interest in your column,
(REV.) RICHARD E. SHIELDS,

ACCESSORY DEALER ROBBED OF PROPERTY

W. H. Hempey, 2108 West Broad street, an automobile accessory store, was held up Tuesday night by two men who entered and pretended to make a purchase. One then covered Hempey with a gun and his companion gathered up three new tires, a couple of inner tubes and a set of skid chains. Then Hempey was hit with a blackjack and rendered unconscious. Meanwhile his pockets were rifled of $17, and when the store keeper came to his senses the bandits and his property were absent.

Last Friday evening, a number of young people surprised Eugene Walcutt, 44 South Wheatland avenue, in honor of his twenty-first birthday. Those present were: Katherine Packard, Esther Packard, Margaret Williamson, Margaret Marsh, Verna Walcutt, Frank Packard, Paul Packard, George Little, Gordon Hughes, Dana Marsh, Milton Marsh, Newton Thatcher, Richard Lewis, and Ralph Walcutt. Lunch was served by Mrs. Walcutt and Ethel Marie Walcutt gave a number of readings.

Quakeress Devotes Income of $1,000,000 Inheritance to Aiding Workers.

HER HUSBAND IS IN POVERTY

Dutch Government of Holland Which Seized Her Furniture for Taxes—Declares All Government Is Based Upon Force.

The Hague.—Both Holland and England are speculating on the Tolstoyian ideas of the Quakeress, Beatrice Cadbury Boeke, head of the Cadbury Cocoa works, who made over to the workers of Bournemouth village the income of 28,000 of the shares in the cocoa corporation which she inherited from her father, Richard Cadbury.

England is also speculating with profound interest upon Mrs. Boeke's conflict with the Dutch government, which she has been conducting for several years in the effort to enforce her Tolystoyian belief that all government is based upon force and should not be obeyed.

Mrs. Boeke has devoted the income of her $1,000,000 bequest to help the workers to rise above the limitations of organized government, which she denounces as a tyranny and a bar to human progress.

Her husband, Cornelius Boeke, a sturdy Dutchman, believes precisely as she does. He has no regret at the action of his wife in donating the income of her 28,000 shares in the Cadbury works to enable the workers to work out their destinies on the lines which she has adopted.

She could not give more than the income, for under the terms of her father's will the fortune of more than $1,000,000 is hers only for life. At her death the property descends to her children.

Workers Don't Grasp Ideal.

The workers of Bournemouth, however, do not quite grasp the ideal of rising above the limitations of organized government which Mrs. Boeke cherishes and for which she has suffered and probably will continue to suffer as long as her conflict with the Dutch government continues.

A deputation of these workers made a trip across the channel to the Netherlands to thank their benefactress for her generosity. In their testimonial to her they expressed no scintilla of a desire to follow her in the thorny path of conflict with organized government in which she is energetically engaged.

The indications are that the workers whom she has endowed for her lifetime will continue to pay their taxes like honest, industrious English villagers; that they will obey the king and respect the law as their forefathers have done for all past generations.

In her letter to the workers announcing the gift, Mrs. Boeke thanks them "for the many privileges the unearned income resulting from your united work has enabled me to enjoy."

She enjoins them to administer the shares "for social, industrial and philanthropic purposes."

Her renunciation is a step in her struggle to bring about a better state of society. And her conception of the way in which a better state of society can be brought about is indicated by her long struggle with the Dutch government.

She refuses to recognize the authority of that government when it comes, for instance, to the important governmental function of collecting taxes. She and her husband do not consider the Dutch government—or any other government, for all governments in their conception are "based upon force"—has a right to levy upon them their legitimate share in the upkeep of the state.

So they decline to pay. And the Dutch government has twice applied to them the processes designed for the coercion of taxpayers who will not or cannot pay.

Deaths During the Past Week

Mrs. Ella Murnane Rea, aged 38 years, wife of Mr. Charles Rea, 1671 Sullivant Ave., died Monday morning, at Mt. Carmel Hospital. She had undergone an operation several days previous and had been apparently doing nicely, but a sudden turn for the worse at an early hour Monday resulted in her death at four o'clock that morning. Mrs. Rea was beloved by a host of friends who mourn her departure. She leaves, besides her husband, one son, Ralph Rea; two daughters, Ruth and Virginia; two sisters, Julia Meagher and Mary McDonough, and two brothers, Herman and William Murnane. The funeral was held at St. Aloysius Church, Wednesday morning. Burial took place in St. Joseph's Cemetery.

Mrs. Amelia Kellmer, wife of Gottlieb Kellmer, died from complications last Friday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Joseph Beh, 310 S. Powell Ave., after an illness of six weeks. The funeral was Monday at St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church. Burial took place in Oak Grove Cemetery, Delaware.

Mrs. Ada R. Detwiler, 50, died at the home of her sister, Emily Harrison, 2223 W. Broad St. The funeral took place at Briggsdale Church, Saturday. Burial in Green Lawn by C. J. Kuhn.

Miss Vergie Carter, of 69 N. Hague Ave., is convalescing from a recent operation for appendicitis, at Mt. Carmel Hospital.

Wishing to increase our subscription list and believing the children of the Hilltop are desirous of earning some extra money for their Christmas fund, beginning December 1st and continuing throughout the month the publisher of the Hilltop Record will extend to each boy and girl of the Hilltop between the age of seven and twenty the privilege of soliciting and collecting for new subscriptions to the Hilltop Record. Subscription rates will be 50 cents for one year, or 25 cents for six months, the paper to be delivered weekly by carrier. A commission of 50% will be given for each subscription, no recognition being given a subscription unless accompanied by the cash price.

Now, boys and girls, get busy, bring your subscriptions together with full name, address and telephone number (if any) of the subscriber to the Hilltop Record office (over Prior's Hardware Store) on Mondays and Fridays between 11:30 a. m. and 1:30 p. m. For further information call Hilltop 701 or 582.

$180,000,000 IN CHRISTMAS CLUBS

Under date of November 30th, New York financial circles report that there was saved in Christmas Clubs throughout the country in the past year the vast sum of one hundred and eighty million dollars. A "Christmas Club" is a plan for saving money; in fact, it is not only a plan but a system by which the member saves a specified sum each week. The member determines the amount he can spare weekly and brings in the first deposit and joins the Club, a special Pass Book being issued to him showing the club joined and the amount deposited. Then he makes his deposits weekly, or in advance, for 50 weeks, when he has a nice sum to his credit available for next Christmas needs or to keep for future use.

The "Increasing" Clubs are a novel idea. The number starts with 1c, 2c, 5c or 10c and increases his deposit the same amount each week. For instance, in the 5c Club, first week, 5c; second week, 10c; third week, 15c, and so on increasing 5c each week.

In the "Even Amount" Clubs the member deposits the same amount each week. The Clubs are 25c, 50c, $1, $2, $5, $10 or more. A Club to suit everyone.

The Christmas Club has proven the most popular plan for saving money ever devised and will undoubtedly be heartily welcomed in our city.

The Christmas Club is open at the Hilltop Branch of the Citizens Trust & Savings Bank, where full information can be had for the asking.

"The Basis of Liberty" is the lecture which is all probability Frank Johnson will give when he comes to Glenwood M. E. Church on the lecture course, Dec. 19th. Those who have heard Mr. Johnson say that his talk is entirely different from the usual "community lecture," because it is delivered attractively and uniquely, and deals with the subject from an entirely new angle. He is capable of entertaining and holding the attention of the audience as well as the grown ups, and that is a high compliment to any speaker.

The new Hilltop Fruit and Vegetable Market at 2289 West Broad St., opposite the engine house, is managed by expert fruit dealers with years of experience in that line—has been realized by hundreds of Hilltop housewives for their wonderful offering of the best that is to be gotten in the fruit and vegetable line, are for their accommodation and courtesy. The management will continue the same good policy in the future and wishes to thank you all for your kind patronage; and those that have not been in the store and taken advantage of the wonderful offerings, will be entirely welcome when they come. Quality and service. Hilltop Fruit and Vegetable Market.

Messrs. F. Taylor, H. G. McCoy, and J. Simpson of Cleveland, Ohio, spent the past week with Mr. and Mrs. F. Redding and daughter, Maybell, of 363 Clarendon avenue, Mr. Simpson returning to Cleveland on Wednesday. Mr. Taylor and Mr. McCoy left Saturday for Scottdale, Pa., to spend Christmas with their parents.

What Are Our Schools Doing?

Most of our people are interested in the answer to the above question. A complete answer would be too long to give here, but a partial answer can be made.

The public schools are caring for about 36,000 pupils in regular day classes. This includes kindergarten, elementary, junior and senior high schools. In addition to this there are evening schools for adults, Americanization classes, part-time schools for those between 16 and 18 years of age who have to work, individual and opportunity schools for those who are mentally deficient or those who become chronic disciplinary problems, summer schools, and the normal school. There are special teachers for health and nutrition work, cooking, sewing, physical education, manual training, music, art, dramatics, and other special lines such as commercial work and trades.

With all this school program to promote, one of the big tasks is to keep within the limit of expenditures necessitated by the curtailment of tax revenue. The present building program requires approximately one-fourth of all school money for interest and sinking fund. With every little increase in school revenue, the schools must provide for a constant growth in population that requires about 30 new school rooms per year to keep pace with it, and this means more teachers and equipment. Many means are being resorted to to meet this need. The work of the teachers is being made a little heavier, and gas, light and water, and school and janitor supplies are being conserved.

There are 60 public school buildings in Columbus, three of them on the Hill Top: Highland is one of 11 junior high schools. There has been an increase of 77% in junior high school enrollment in the past ten years, while the total school enrollment increased only 32%. There are about 9000 pupils at present enrolled in these junior high schools, about 560 of these being at Highland. There are also about 185 elementary pupils at Highland, and John Burroughs and West Broad schools are filled almost to capacity only a year after the establishment of the John Burroughs school. At the present rate of growth a new school will soon be needed on the Hill Top.

Several other school activities are conducted on a small scale, and many others could be undertaken if funds were available, but the present plan of operations represents the best that school officials have been able to devise under present conditions.

The Hilltop's Sturdiest Youngster

Two Years Old This Month, and Caring for the Financial Needs of Nearly 5000.

As evidence of the progressiveness and stability of this community's enterprise, the Hilltop Bank has become a financial organization standing solely on its own feet almost before the shine on the furniture has worn off.

As an answer to the gloomy pessimists who said the Hilltop could not support a banking institution, let us cite this record of two years growth.

The bank opened December 11, 1920, with deposits of $19,669 and 308 accounts. A month later the deposits were $85,000 and a year later, a quarter of a million dollars were on deposit by Hilltop patrons. Today the total of deposits is approximately $500,000 representing about 5000 customers.

The Citizens Trust & Savings Bank had faith in the future of the Hilltop. This faith has been more than justified. The business accorded this bank has proven the efficacy of the spirit of service. It was with this spirit, backed up with limitless energy and enthusiasm, that Jean Worrel undertook the management of our Hilltop Bank.

This success has come, first, because it fills an absolute need; second, because of the splendid co-operation received from the community; third, because this bank, this service and this organization has had in back of it the tremendous resources and facilities of an $18,000,000 institution, which has developed an unlimited capacity for bank service through its own complete organization and its membership in the Federal Reserve System.

The Hilltop Bank is a part of this community. It has always and will continue to work with and for the Hilltop.

The most complete banking service in Central Ohio, which has distinguished the Citizens Trust & Savings Bank offices, is part and parcel of Hilltop operations. We appreciate the business that has made possible this record of the Hilltop. We respond by giving the best that is in us.

We anticipate a future of great accomplishment side by side with those having Hilltop interests at heart.

Fight Like Animals When They Are Captured.

Small Boys Have Grown Like Jungle Animals, Without Education or Knowledge of Anything Outside Hills and Forests.

Cairo, Ill.—Two small boys, about eight and ten years old, are feeling the touch of civilization after passing the greater part of their lives in the manner of prehistoric cavemen.

They were caught after a running and scratching battle by a sheriff's posse, which trailed them into the forests and hills of Pulaski county, near here. Both surrendered only after exhausting their infant strength in a biting and scratching conflict with the men.

That the boys were existing in a primitive manner was first discovered by county authorities when a woman, living in the northern part of the county, asked for aid for her father, who, she said, was suffering from tuberculosis.

The boys ran away when she went into the forests for her father and took him to her home, she said. They were grandsons of the sick man, she told the sheriff.

Several attempts were made by the sheriff to find the place described as the abode of the two children, but because of the wildness of the country these attempts failed. The place was finally located only after a systematic combing of the forests.

When the posse arrived the boys fled deeper into the woods, climbing through the thick underbrush and into trees with surprising agility, the sheriff said. The posse then surrounded the hut and waited until night, when the two lads returned and were seized.

Fighting like wild animals, they dug their teeth, fingers and toe nails, which were like long claws, into the flesh of the sheriff and his deputies. One got away and climbed a tree like a monkey. In trying to swing to another tree he fell and was recaptured.

How long the lads have lived in the woods officials do not know. They have grown like jungle animals, without education or knowledge of anything outside their hills and forests. They lived in a little hut made of boxes and subsisted on wild roots and forest animals.

They were dressed in rags, the older one wearing a pair of tattered overalls and the other having but a torn coat which hung in strips from his shoulders almost to his knees. They were unable to tell their names and had dif-

PETAIN HAS EYE FOR BEAUTY

Famous French Marshal Proves to Young Officers That Girl's Glances Were for Him.

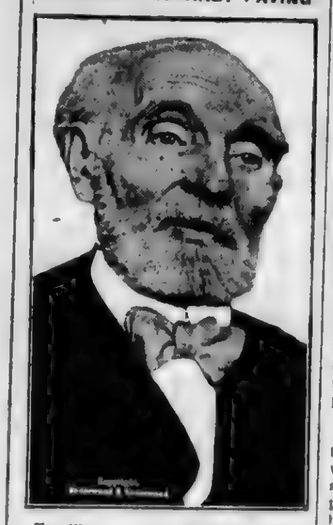
Paris.—Marshal Petain, credited with having the coldest temperament of all the famous French commanders, nevertheless always has had a tender spot in his heart for youth and beauty. An incident illustrating this occurred quite recently. After lunching with some friends the marshal was strolling with them through the neighboring park, and a young girl coming from the opposite direction crossed and recrossed the marshal's path as though fascinated by the group of young officers with whom he was surrounded.



The marshal noticed the girl, and with a whimsical smile at an aide-de-camp he said:

"Lieutenant X—— evidently thinks the fair one's glances are for him, while I am perfectly certain they are for me."

The marshal had hardly spoken when the young girl, her face blushing, approached the group and asked if she might speak with the marshal. She held a letter, doubtless containing a request of some sort. This was handed to the marshal, who read it and immediately granted the favor asked. The same whimsical smile came over the great soldier's face as the girl hurried away.

"Didn't I tell you so?" he said.

INVENTED ASPHALT PAVING

You likely do not know that the man who invented the present process of sheet asphalt for streets is Otto G. Guelich, now eighty-nine years old and an old resident of Washington. Guelich is a native of Denmark and took out his first citizenship papers two days too late to vote for Abraham Lincoln for President for his first term.

U. S. PROBES 500 MAIL FRAUDS

Northern Illinois Leads With Charges in $140,000,000 Swindles—To Push Trials.

Washington. — Approximately 500 cases involving fraudulent use of the mails are in the hands of United States attorneys for investigation to determine whether criminal proceedings should be instituted, it was announced at the Department of Justice. Plans are under way in the department for expediting the trial of each case, which it is decided to prosecute. Officials estimated that the cases already under consideration represented a loss to the American public through postal swindles of more than $140,000,000.

The northern district of Illinois leads the country in detected instances of fraudulent use of the mails, the department records show, while the western district of Missouri leads in stock swindles, with Nebraska second and northern New York third.

HAWK DROPS FISH INTO PAN

Five-Inch Perch Lands With Splash in Skillet of Bubbling Fat in Hands of Camper.

Issaquah, Wash.—While Howard Lowe was holding a skillet of sizzling bacon over his camp stove near here, a five-inch perch dropped from the sky, landing with a splash in the bubbling fat, then flopped to the ground. Lowe looked down at the dying fish then up to see a fish-hawk sitting in the topmost branches of the fir directly over the fire. Lowe disclaims any accurate knowledge of how come the fish in his frying pan, but faithfully believes the fish-hawk caught the perch legitimately, and was attacked by a crow or eagle, dropping the fish in escaping anticipated punishment.

Luckiest Man Picks 161 Four-Leaf Clovers

Rockland, Me.—The luckiest man in Maine, if luck depends on four-leaf clovers, is Alfred Benner of The Meadows, this city, who has a record this season of 161, besides 45 of the five-leaf variety and 23 of the six-leaf, with three of the seven-leaf for good measure.

WAR ON DISEASE FULL OF THRILLS

Many Victories Won in Bitter Battles Waged for Conquest of Contagion.

CAMPAIGN AGAINST HOOKWORM

Not a Person in Virginia County Has Enough Hookworms in His Body to Produce Any of the Symptoms of the [illegible].

Washington.—"If persistent echoes of wars disturb one's peace of mind it is a wholesome antidote to turn attention occasionally to another sort of world struggle, a beneficent war—the war against disease," says a bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographic society based on a communication to the society from William Joseph Showalter.

"In all the stirring history of man's effort to make himself master of his environment, there is no more thrilling chapter than that which tells of the bitter battles he has waged for the conquest of contagion.

"Three announcements of almost unprecedented import to mankind are expected to be made at no distant date.

"The first of these, chronologically, at least, will be that yellow fever has at last been banished from the face of the earth, and that the germ which causes it has become extinct, along with the dinosaur, the dodo, the great auk and the passenger pigeon.

"The next in order will probably be that hookworm disease, which has been called a 'handmaiden of poverty, an associate of crime and degeneracy, a destroyer of energy and vitality, a menace and an obstacle to all that makes for civilization,' and which is endemic in a zone that embraces half of the earth's population, can be driven from any community which has the will to get rid of it.

"Last will come the statement that large-scale demonstrations have proved that malaria can be eradicated from almost any community that has enough vital force left to push a thorough, though inexpensive, campaign for its extirpation.

Virginia Early Campaign Center.

"Richmond county, Virginia, where the war on the hookworm as a world-wide fight had its inception, stands out as an example of what may be accomplished and as an evidence that it can be accomplished with much less difficulty than was formerly supposed.

"When the work began there, about thirteen years ago, 82 per cent of the people had the disease. A few years later a resurvey showed that this had been reduced to 35 per cent. A more recent resurvey reduced it to 2 per cent, and in 1922 it can be announced that there is not a single person in the entire county in whose body the worms are numerous enough to produce any of the symptoms of the malady.

"There are two kinds of hookworms that invade the human body, an Old World species known as Ancylostoma duodenale and the 'New World' form known as Necator americanus.

"The New World species of hookworm is a small parasitic creature about as thick as an ordinary pin and half as long. The adult female worm, inhabiting the small intestine, lays thousands of eggs daily. After these pass out of the body they hatch within one or two days. They are microscopic in size when hatched and never grow larger as long as they remain in the ground.

"Then comes along a pair of bare feet or hands, or some other part of the body touches the infected ground, and the little villains make the most of their opportunity. They promptly begin to bore their way through the skin, causing a severe irritation known as 'ground itch.' Once under the skin, they travel through the tissues until they come to the lymphatic system, and thence into the blood.

"Finally, after passing through the heart and lungs, they reach the throat and pass thence through the stomach, ultimately landing in the small intestine, to whose wall they fasten themselves, and for as much as seven years, if not disturbed by treatment, take their fill of the victim's blood and intestinal tissue.

How They Do Their Work.

"They develop in their salivary glands a substance that has a marked power of inhibiting coagulation of the blood. Attaching themselves to the surface of the intestinal wall, rasping and sucking away the delicate inner cells on which they feed, they lay bare the deeper tissues, and the wound continues to bleed for a long time, even after the worm has deserted the spot to which it was attached.

"But they go even further than that. By some method not well understood, they cause the blood to undergo a change, reducing the amount of hemoglobin—the element that makes us red-blooded, and which constitutes the ingredient that tends to render healthy blood an unfertile soil for the seeds of infection sown there through lack of sanitation.

"Yet, owing to the fact that its every stage is so well known, that the methods of combating it are so dramatically effective, and that those who are cured so quickly begin to experience the joys of living once more, it makes itself the most readily and successfully used of all diseases with which to point a community toward a goal of better health."

The Wonderful Tree

By Christopher G. Hazard

(©, 1933, Western Newspaper Union.)

IT STOOD in the corner of a rather needy room. It was festooned with strings of popcorn and cables of cranberries. Wisps of tissue paper and tinsel ornaments were out upon the branches, and small candles stood ready to illuminate the occasion. There were many invisible things upon the tree, too. The imaginations of the children had been as busy as their dreams. Family resources may be limited, but there are no bounds in the realms of Santa Claus and hope. In the magical Christmas time the clouds of poverty are all as gilded and beautiful as any sunset can furnish. Anything may happen then. Cinderella is as hopeful as her more favored sisters: not an urchin but has an expectant eye. So the Tanner Christmas tree was as beautiful as a picture and as full of presents as a picture could be.

But, however pictured by fancy and made of good wishes, the presents were all invisible. No one could see what was in the heads of the dreamers and the hearts of the anxious but needy providers. For weeks the mill had been closed, and now the family pocketbook was about empty. Father Tanner looked at the tree, could not see a gift on it, and shook his head. Mother Tanner was inclined to make the best of it.

Yes, the tree was one of the family. It had been the tree of last year's Christmas and the tree of the year before that. It was a tree that kept its evergreen habit and that did not seem to grow old. It was like a living tree made to bring forth its fruit every year. It had been so good to them that they had named it Bounty. And now it stood there in the dark, all dressed up, but with nothing but blossoms without any fruit. It could see the hurrying children running to their morning disappointment. It could hear their cries of surprise and chagrin. Silly Sam, more needy of amusement than the others, would look in vain for his expected go-cart; Sue would miss the two dress patterns for her big doll, her new hat and high chair for her little doll; Bill Tanner would not get his skates; Dick would still need a sled. It was anything but a merry tree.

But it was a wonderful tree. It had a power of making itself felt all over a neighborhood. It could summon Santa Claus by a kind of wireless message that went through walls and everything. It reached as far as the folks who were having a Christmas eve party two blocks away and made them think of Mr. Folsom's mill boss and Mrs. Folsom's laundry woman. They had been wishing for some new fun for their party that day and now it came into their heads to go over and be Santa for the Tanners. So the tree drew a very silent but very busy company to the Tanners' back door.

As the children had left directions for Santa on the table it was easy to find out what the tree was expected to do, so, presently, it did it. There was more, too, than orders for the wanted things; the merrymakers had brought with them enough to satisfy any reasonable tree; there were picture books, picture puzzles, games, a scissors grinder that could make the sparks fly, a train of cars that could go, a doll that could say "mama," and candy enough to go round. For Father and Mother Tanner there was a pocketbook with gold in it, and a note of good cheer that was better than the gold.

So the wonderful tree spent the rest of the night in trembling joy. It could not sleep for thinking of the friendly love that had provided such a happy morning to come. And when the first of the morning light brought all the Tanners downstairs the tree fairly shook with pleasure, amid the wonder and the glee of that Christmas day.

As for the servants of Santa Claus, they had never had such a merry Christmas before. Their hearts were so warm that they did not mind the frost. They sang over the pleasure of giving pleasure and relief. They said they knew that Santa Claus had to live up North so that he could cool off after his warm interest in the happiness of others.

Helpful Hints for Hilltop Homes

SALVATION ARMY DOUGHNUTS
(40 Cakes)

Two and one-half cups flour, 2½ teaspoons baking powder, ½ teaspoon salt, 1 cup sugar. Mix. Add 2/3 cup milk, 1 well beaten egg. Flavor with vanilla. Fry in hot fat or, if preferred, a vegetable oil.

FRENCH MUSTARD

Mix 1 tablespoon sugar and 2 of mustard; beat in one egg until perfectly smooth. Add 1 tablespoon butter and 1 cup vinegar slowly to prevent curdling and cook in double boiler—stirring while cooking.

BOSTON BROWN BREAD
(3 Small Loaves)

Thoroughly blend together 2 cups graham flour, 1 cup corn meal, 1 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon soda. Add ½ cup syrup or molasses, 1 tablespoon shortening (melted) ¾ cup raisins and 1½ cups sour milk. Beat well and place in greased pans. Bake or steam. If desired sweet milk and 3 teaspoons of baking powder may be used instead of the sour milk and soda.

Christmas Violets

By Mary Graham Bonner

(©, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

HAROLD had been told by his mother that big cities were full of designing women. Harold did not know whether his mother was right or not. But he did know that in his city boarding house there was one of the dearest little girls who had ever lived.

Harold was not selfish. He was far from being a miser. His idea of a miser was a chap he had known in his home town. He had never spent any money which he could possibly avoid spending. He always ate with his friends and rarely paid for a meal. He was always out of cigarettes and so smoked his friends' cigarettes.

He had made a good living and never failed to talk of his poverty.

He had been accused of worshiping money and he had replied: "Not a bit of it. I have great respect for money. That is the difference."

Harold despised that kind of a person. And yet, perhaps, wouldn't the "dearest little girl" think he was mean? He had never given her anything and he had lived at the boarding house for six months now. Did she think he was mean? That was what bothered him. She had told him of a person she had known whom she considered a miser, and she had told him of a joke upon this "miser." For he had bargained with a little shop dealer and had obtained an article marked a dollar for fifty cents, and then had walked down the street a little farther on and had seen the same article in another window for twenty-five cents. And finally he had seen it in a ten-cent store for a dime—well, he had almost considered life useless, while everyone else had rejoiced that it had been a good one on the "miser."

One of the reasons that made him feel that she thought, perhaps, he was mean was because she knew others who were generous. Or, at least, one other.

Every Saturday she had received flowers. She had taken a card out of the box as they had sat at the boarding house table at breakfast. The other boarders teased her about her admirer and she seemed to enjoy it. Only he felt uncomfortable and could say nothing.

And Helen, whom he called to himself the dearest little girl, had been receiving these flowers for quite a few weeks now.

Finally he could stand it no longer. His mother needn't tell him anything more about the city's designing women. He was not going to lose the dearest little girl, if there was yet a chance, because of his mother's warnings to keep to himself.

And, besides, Christmas was coming, and Christmas was a time of year when everyone felt happy. He was going to make a tremendous fight to be happy!

And he sent her violets, beautiful deep purple violets, with a pink rose in the center.

Never had he seen her so happy as she was over his violets. How differently she acted about his than about the others. And then he asked her if she would take a walk with him. So far, they had had all their talks in the boarding house.

"I wonder," he said, "if you'd think it was awfully sudden if I made a little suggestion? I was thinking how nice a ring would look on that left hand of yours—as a Christmas present—and an engagement present, if I may be so bold, and if you've not already promised yourself to the other fellow? Or, maybe you could learn to like me better."

"What other fellow?" Helen asked.

"The one who has been sending you flowers all along."

"Oh," Helen said, "I'll have to tell you the truth. I sent them to myself. You were so shy, you seemed to like me and yet couldn't go about telling me or asking me out, and I thought maybe I'd make you curious or jealous something."

"And you've cared for me all along have for you?" he queried.

She nodded. And then he told her warnings he had been given by his don't know but what's she's" Helen said. "I made designs on, she could truthfully say."

neither of them thought of the only of the glorious future ahead. Helen were more violets on tmas day and a ring with a stone sparkled so beautifully. And had dinner by themselves—a real tmas dinner, for it was not only tmas day—it was their wedding too!

Christmas Music

By Mary Graham Bonner

(©, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

BRENT had grown away from his family. Brent was a successful man. He played a violin in a big city orchestra. He belonged to the union and the union backed him up and he never played a minute more than he had to play. It had become such a business with him that he never played now when he came home.

He came home once a year. Something handed down to Brent from his parents made him do this, although when he was home he often was cross. On the last home-coming he remembered his mother had talked to him about the coziness of a home and had spoken of the attractive house she had seen a picture of in the paper. She wished Brent would marry and have a nice home like that instead of an apartment which was so far from being a home. He had explained to his mother that such a "home" was beyond the incomes of ordinary city people and that if she wanted him to be as cozy as that she'd have to get him the coziness of millions.

For it took a millionaire to own a real "home" in a city.

How foolish his mother had been not to have realized all that. She knew so little of city life, of business, of anything outside her own small groove.

But Brent was coming home for Christmas and that was happiness for the parents. Only they did wish Brent was more like the boy he had promised to be. There was something so hard about him. He had told them the time before of a friend of his who was getting a divorce from his wife.

"But my friend is so honorable," Brent had said. "He wants the divorce as he's bored with his wife, though still she loves him, but he is having her secure the divorce and is paying all the expenses, for it is only fair to a divorcee to have the divorce secured by her. He really never wanted to marry her. He became tired of her soon after they were engaged. But it was his high sense of honor which kept him from telling her—to have a man break the engagement would have been dishonorable."

And Brent scorned their opinions. He regarded them as old-fashioned.

There was a man in a town some little distance away who wanted to see Brent's father on business and it was arranged that a meeting should take place at the man's house. Brent's father was going to sell much of the land, which had become a burden since Brent had gone away.

And he arranged the meeting so that he would be able to meet Brent on his way home for Christmas.

Brent greeted his father with reserved affection. "So you've brought the fiddle," Brent's father exclaimed. Brent never brought his violin with him any more because he would be asked to play by old friends who didn't realize that music was his business.

"Yes," Brent said, "I have to play right after Christmas and the town I'm to play in is nearer here, so I'm going there directly."

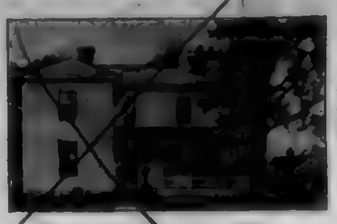
There was nothing more said. But at the next station a group of youths got on and at once began to play the mandolins and guitars which they had with them.

Brent's father nudged him.

"Don't insult me," Brent whispered angrily.

"No son, I only wondered—I didn't mean you—I wonder if I could play on your fiddle with the boys. You know it's a good many years since you brought yours with you and I haven't touched one—I'll be careful of it. I used to play as a boy, you know. They said you got your music from me."

And Brent's father played and became a boy again. All the Christmas tunes they played—and the people in the train sang and there was merry-making that recalled to the aged man the happy days of long ago, despite the fact that his fingers were stiff.



Brent watched at first, rather disgusted at such a display of friendliness, for many of the people were strangers, and then he saw his father's eyes and the expression there—the expression which the music gave him and which he had denied him. What a cold, conceited, heartless person he had been, severe with his parents, keeping his music solely for pay, denying it to those whose love and warm sympathy had given him the talent.

"We had music, Christmas music, on the train," Brent's father told his mother as they got home

"And we're going to have it here, too," Brent added. "I've made music my business, but Dad has put music into his life. And somehow," he added, and his voice had a new affection in it, "that Christmas music on that dingy, local train, and the singing of those cheery people just got at my heart-strings somehow," he remarked.

Doctor Would Experiment on Convicts With Twilight Sleep.

Believes That Under Influence of Anesthetic Subjects Will Tell All Facts About Crimes of Which They Are Accused.

Hot Springs.—Dr. E. E. House, Ferris, Tex., physician, will probably continue his efforts to secure permission to conduct experiments on prisoners at the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan., to demonstrate his theory that while under the influence of scopolamine anesthetic, or during "twilight sleep," subjects will tell the facts regarding crimes of which they are accused.

In addressing the convention here of the Medical Association of the Southwest, Doctor House said that he intended to use every effort to secure permission to make experiments on 1,800 prisoners, taking the stand that this number of experiments will prove his theory to the satisfaction of both physicians and criminologists.

The medical association failed to give its official indorsement to Doctor House's plan, but the subject was widely discussed in an informal manner, and much interest was expressed in the continuation of the experiments, which Doctor House says have been under way for several years and have brought invariable satisfactory results.

In the informal discussion of his paper the physician emphasized that the results of his experiments could not be expected to stand as evidence in any court, but claimed that the facts obtained through questioning of accused persons or witnesses during the period of "twilight sleep" could be advantageously used by authorities in the solution of many mysterious crimes, and in dozens of instances would prevent a miscarriage of justice, even if the real criminal was not brought to justice.

In one experiment in Dallas, which he cited to the association, he said that a man under arrest, charged with a serious crime, seemed almost certain of conviction on circumstantial evidence. "Twilight sleep" was induced without the prisoner's knowledge, and he gave information which, when checked up by the Dallas police, proved the man's innocence and resulted in his acquittal.

The physician held that, when his theory has been adequately proved by thorough experiment in hundreds of cases, a new field in criminal investigation will be opened up, which will not only prove a powerful aid in the detection of criminals, but will also become a great protection to those unjustly accused of crime.

Seize Mass of Red Literature.

Warsaw, Poland.—The Warsaw police have discovered a new Bolshevik organization for distribution of Bolshevik literature.

The number of pamphlets, leaflets and booklets they have seized is so great that the value of the paper on which all this propaganda is printed is more than 5,000,000 marks.

Boss Refuses to Work.

Zanesville, O.—A stray arrow has been passed over Joe Fletcher's head, lighting in a tree. His boss, Ed Neff, hired them for him, but he refused to work in an abandoned coop and left for parts unknown.

Blows Up House.

Berlin.—During the absence of her husband, a laborer living in a Berlin suburb could not get any gas by turning on the gas jet. When her husband rang the bell there was no answer pushed the door open. A short circuit was caused by the gas-filled house. The whole house was blown off, knocking the wife down.

RECALLS FIRST WHITE HOUSE

Street on Which Washington Lived in New York Is Now Dingy Byway.

HOME WAS ONCE SHOW PLACE

First President Lived There When Inaugurated First Time—Mrs. Washington Wrote That She Found Life There Very Dull.

New York.—A walk in Cherry street recalls that in the Seventeenth century when the little Dutch settlement of New Amsterdam passed over into the hands of the English and was called New York, there came one Richard Sackett in 1671 and possessed himself of land out in the country, amid green lanes and fronting for about 400 feet on the West river. He planted cherry trees along the bank, then planned a pleasure garden, which should have a bowling green, like the gardens in old England. Tables were placed and tea was served, with rum or arrack, or even good madeira to drink the health of King William and Queen Mary. The owner called the place Cherry Garden. A lane led to it from the town. This soon took the name of Cherry lane, and in the springtime, under the blossoming trees, young men and maidens strolled.

As the years went on the lane became a street and was extended until it ended in what was then St. George's, now Franklin square. Houses were put up along its length, and in 1770 a fine one was built of brick by Walter Franklin, a rich merchant who traded with China and left his name as a legacy to Franklin square. He left a rich widow as well, who married again, this time Samuel Osgood, and the big brick house, three stories high, belonged then to them. In 1791 George Washington, lately elected President of the newly-formed United States, was to be inaugurated here.

Picked as White House.

A committee had been appointed to select a suitable house for him. What could be better than the Osgood house in Cherry street? So they took it for him, and Mrs. Osgood and Lady Kitty Duer were charged to put it in order for his reception. Everything was in readiness for Washington when he arrived on April 23 at the foot of Wall street.

He was escorted from Wall street to his new home, 3 Cherry street, and there he established himself with his steward, Samuel Fraunces, better known as Black Sam of Fraunces' tavern. Besides the steward he had "five white men in livery, five black men, two black maids, a housekeeper, three other women servants and his own valet."

When President Washington came to New York at the end of April, his wife was not with him, but she started from Mount Vernon on May 17. She was ten days in making the journey to New York. She had to pass through Philadelphia, then a flourishing town "with a more exclusive society than New York," writes a chronicler of the time.

The New York Advertiser of May 27, remarked: "We are informed that Mrs. Washington may be expected in town about four o'clock. His Excellency, the President and suite, having gone over to meet her at Elizabethtown in the federal barge. The place of landing will be Peck's slip." She was welcomed by a large crowd and the President escorted her to 3 Cherry street. Two nights afterward she held her first reception, and all those who had a claim to elegance and refinement gathered in the large square rooms.

Regular receptions were held after this "when Mrs. Washington would stand by the general in receiving the respects of the visitors."

Dull for Mrs. Washington.

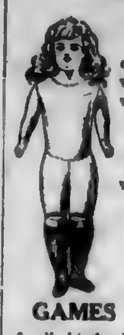
Sometimes in the evenings the coach, with five horses, would drive up to the door of 3 Cherry street, and the President would hand Mrs. Washington to the carriage, then they would go to the little red frame theater in John street. On June 5 the Advertiser announced that "the President and Mrs. Washington saw 'The Clandestine Marriage.'"



Notwithstanding these amusements, Mrs. Washington wrote in October, "I find life very dull here." Probably she missed the beautiful house at Mount Vernon, with its garden and green lawn, sloping to the river. Even the big rooms of the Cherry street house, with all their fine furnishings, could not console her. The President continued to live there until February, 1790, then he took a still finer house on Broadway, near the park of the Bowling Green. Perhaps he thought Mrs. Washington might find it less dull. So the house in Cherry street was robbed of its claim to renown, but it remained a fine old place for many years.

Blows Up House by Doorbell.

Berlin.—During the absence of her husband, a laborer, a housewife in a Berlin suburb committed suicide by turning on the gas. The returning husband rang the bell and receiving no answer pushed it so violently that a short circuit was caused inside the gas-filled house. The front door was blown off, knocking the husband down.

Bunny Brown and His Sister Sue in the Big Woods

(Laura Lee Hope)

On the pleasant River Wanda
Stood three tents upon the shore,
With two lively little children living there.
Though they were two lovely children,
They didn't always think the same.
So their Mother put a stop to this,
Therefore there was no war.

In the midst of all the wild woods
Ran these children every day.
But they didn't mind their Mother
And got lost one day in May.
They didn't know the East from West—
Were in an awful fix,
But finally found a robin's nest
That they had made with sticks.

Now that is all my tale's about.
I just wanted you to hear
How Bunny Brown got lost in the woods
With his Sister Sue so dear.

Pelican Pecks

The Pelican may have a large beak but it hits pretty well just the same. It doesn't take much brains to see the reasonableness of the skip-stop plan used in Detroit, Cleveland (some lines) and other real cities. Skip-stop or bust!!

Did you ever swear or feel like it—when you tried to pass another car on the road or street at night with those anti (?)-glare headlights on it? We have, that is, pretty nearly cussed the cuss that is so cussed as to fail to comply with either law or common decency. The man who glares with his auto lights ought to stare with a glass-eye—for if he doesn't the one who tries to stay off the curb or out of the ditch will, as many already have. Say, Chief French how about a little enforcement of the light ordinance!

Even the preachers get their backs up it seems. The Pelican just said they did not seem to stick together and the clergy let fly. We're glad to hear that Association. Let it prove its faith by its works!

That Lincoln in Voss Brother's window is a beauty! Someone will be made happy with such a luxurious car!

Why shouldn't the Chamber of Commerce take a Santa Claus basket a[t] those Worthington boys are on the job day and night, 365 days in the year! Here's to you old scouts, Merry Christmas and many of them!

Patent medicines are a cheap excuse for not seeing the doctor.

Pins ought to have good heads they never use them! Hence-pin-heads!

MERRY CHRISTMAS.

THE PELICAN.

IT WAS not a very cheerful boy that was looking out of the window at what little dirty ice the winter thaw had left upon the hill in front of the house. Through the fine coasting days he had heard the happy noise of the sledding while the doctor had said that he could not go out and join in it, and now, though he might soon be out of doors again, there was no surety of as good a hill again and small prospect of sport.

It wasn't a very cheerful house, either. Mr. Bondage was a chainmaker, and when he came home from his iron works he always seemed to bring his business with him. The house of Bondage was big and strong, but it was hard, and still, and dark, and too orderly. From the outside it looked like a fort, and inside, the chairs stood at attention, like soldiers. The parlor was a solemn place, where the stiff furniture was seldom prevented from looking at itself in the gilded mirror. The dining room didn't get the sun until towards evening, when the motto, "Be Good and You Will Be Happy" could be as plainly seen as the one on the opposite wall, "Children Should Be Seen but Not Heard." When the boy put on his hated bib there, it exhorted him with, "Don't Eat Too Much."

Chained to the front porch was an iron dog, whose fixed and ferocious snarl was a standing insult to all the village dogs that could get through the iron fence to dispute with him. There was some fun about the place; it was when a surprised dog retired from the attack with a new respect for the tough guardian of the Bondage interests. Even the iron-clad knight in the front hall seemed to laugh through his visor then.

Besides all this, Ishmael had had no Christmas. Mr. Bondage did not believe in Christmas; to him Santa Claus was a foolish imagination and a hurtful superstition. He had joined "The Society for the Prevention of Useless Giving," and was glad to be called a Spug. On December 25th he had presented to his son a picture of himself, standing in front of his office with the scowl upon his face that represented his idea of the expression of greatness, but the only comfort of the day for the boy had been the sweet contents of the small package that his mother had smuggled into his room just before daylight.

But Ishmael Bondage had an Aunt Sarah! And Aunt Sarah had the pleasantest home in the country. It was a low, wide, rambling old house, in the midst of the trees and hugged by the climbing vines that loved it. There wasn't a place in it too good to be used and in its snowy whiteness it seemed to shine out upon the fenceless grounds with an invitation to the hospitality of its gardens and the good cheer of its friendly owners. That was the bright spot for Ishmael. When he went out there his aunt would hang his Fauntleroy suit up in the closet and give him a leather suit that could not be torn and tell him to go it. He could eat without a bib and there was not a motto in sight. By the time that vacation was over he was a real boy. The other boys stopped calling him "Sissy" and no longer asked him if his mother knew he was out. Indeed, he up and thrashed a bullying boy who had knocked over one of his companions who was about half his size. After this there was nothing that he could not have among his crowd. So, every vacation sent a prim but joyful boy to Aunt Sarah and closed with a more robust but rather dejected one on his way home.

But Aunt Sarah also had a mind of her own. She had so much mind that she had concluded that winter to go and give Benjamin Bondage a piece of it. She considered Ishmael's state and situation and resolved to give his father "a good talking to." When she appeared Mr. Bondage felt that his time had probably come. When she had finished he knew it had. She told him that he had forgotten that he was ever a boy, if, indeed, he had ever been one, that he had made himself into an iron man, that he was blind-eyed and hard-hearted, that he seemed determined to fasten all his chains upon Ishmael and make his son as stiff and cold as an icicle.

Mrs. Bondage, behind the door, expected her husband to object in loud and angry tones, but, to her astonishment, he was silent. He seemed to remember an old motto, "Discretion Is the Better Part of Valor," profitably, and did not interfere, even when Aunt Sarah, flushed, but triumphant, carried Ishmael off.

There was some winter play left and to come at Sweetfield, but Aunt Sarah wasn't satisfied so easily as that, for she had made up the rest of her mind into an idea that Ishmael should have the Christmas that he hadn't had, after all. It wasn't much of a Christmas day when the belated Christmas tree blossomed and bore fruit, but it was a fine tree. The snow and ice had disappeared and a warm wind made the icy winter seem like early spring, but Aunt Sarah said that evergreen trees kept Christmas all the year round, and that every day was their day. Certainly it was the most interesting tree that Ishmael had ever seen, from the bundle at the bottom, through all the ornaments, lights and gifts, to the mysterious package at the top of it shone with kind and thoughtful love and sparkled with merry wishes and glad promise. They and the children from the neighborhood who had come to share the joy and the presents that Aunt Sarah had prepared were wondering what would be found in that last parcel at the top, until it was taken down, and then a part of the party, at least, was surprised when the wrapping was taken off and a wonderful pocketknife, beside a first-class football, conveyed merry wishes from Mr. Bondage to his son. Aunt Sarah said afterwards that at this she nearly "went off the handle."

"A Wonderful Pocketknife—"

When May came it seemed time for Ishmael to go home, but he was not very happy at the prospect. Indeed, he was rather unhappy about it. He felt something like one on his way to jail, and even shed tears at the thought of leaving Sweetfield, so that a squirrel, seeing him wiping his eyes under a tree, exclaimed "Oh, what a rainy boy!" but the day came and Ishmael went.

Another surprise awaited him, however, for, as he neared home and entered it, everything seemed changed. The house looked sunny and pleasant in its new colors, the fence had disappeared, the iron dog had been moved to the barn, and the mailed knight had gone down to the ironworks to be turned into plowshares.

When Mr. Bondage went out to Sweetfield to visit his sister and to report upon Ishmael's progress, Aunt Sarah had her reward. "It is all your doing, Sarah," said he. "I needed someone to show me up to myself." "Well, brother," said Aunt Sarah, "A Stitch in Time Saves Nine," as the proverb has it, and you certainly will be proud of our boy yet, as proud of him as I am of my big, new brother."

When December came blustering around again and brought Santa Claus and all his load of love and jollity, there was no place that more warmly welcomed him than Mount Freedom, as Mr. Bondage's home had come to be called, and of all the happy Christmas parties of that year, none was fuller of mirth and good cheer than the one at Mount Freedom. They danced about the tree and under the motto that hung from the top of it with its message of good will to everybody, the football was kicked all over the floor and they shouted in their glee. The squeaking toys, the tooting whistles, the happy songs, all made the time as merry as it ought always to be, while the gifts spoke messages of love.

Ishmael had prospered enough in his studies to make a picture of Sweetfield. It hung over the mantel shelf in the living room and under it he had written, "The Home of the Green Christmas." When anyone asked him about it he would tell them how spring once came in a wintry time; he would say that while Christmas comes but once a year, it sometimes comes twice, and that whenever it comes it brings good cheer; but he was never able to make a picture of his Aunt Sarah that seemed to him good enough.

The Bad Children's Xmas

THIS is a story of last Christmas day; and I will tell you right away that it ended happily. But it began sadly. It was Christmas day up at the North pole, and as usual on the day before Christmas, St. Nicholas had been hurried and rather grumpy. Only this time, Mother Nicholas thought to herself that he was just a bit grumpier than she had ever known him. And at suppertime she found that she was right.

He came into the kitchen, closing his workshop door with a bang, and sat down with all the little Nicholases to his porridge.

"Well, I've said it before," he growled, "but this time I mean it. The children down there in the world will get nothing from my pack this night. It's time they were taught a lesson."

All the little Nicholases gasped, but Mother Nicholas only asked calmly: "Why, what is the matter now, father? After you've been working for them the whole year, you wouldn't go and disappoint the poor dears would you?"

"Yes, I would," declared St. Nicholas, swallowing his porridge in great gulps, and pretending that he was not a saint at all. "Half of them go around saying that there isn't any St. Nicholas, poking fun at me, and laughing in their sleeves. And the other half think it makes no difference whether they are good children or not, I'll fill their stockings just the same. It's a thankless job, I tell you. And I'm too old a man for it. So!"

"Come," said Mother Nicholas, soothingly, "here is a plate of griddle cakes. When you have eaten you will see things differently."

"No, when I have eaten I shall go to bed. That's where an old fellow like me belongs, an old fellow who children don't believe in."

Mother saw that he was determined, and that there was nothing to do for it, since griddle cakes wouldn't help. So she put her finger to her lips to motion the children silent, and went on quietly about her work. And when St. Nicholas had finished his supper, he did roll away to bed, only telling the little Nicholases to be sure to hang their stockings, for they had been good children all the year and little outlined in him.

The minute the door closed behind him the little Nicholases burst into excited chatter. "Oh, what a pity! Those poor children! Surely there must be some good ones! Oh dear, what fun will Christmas be to us if all the children in the world down there are unhappy!"

"What indeed!" Mother Nicholas shook her head and looked often at the closed door, behind which St. Nicholas could already be heard snoring.

"And the reindeer!" cried the oldest boy, "what will they do without their yearly exercise? It seems as though father might have gone, if only for their sakes."

Mother Nicholas thought so, too. And at that minute they heard the reindeer's little hoofs beating on the hard snow crust at the door. Wise little beasts! St. Nicholas had never delayed the Christmas-Eve journey so long before, and so here they were to save him the trouble of going for them. The Nicholas children felt that they never could face the poor little reindeer's disappointment.

But what was Mother Nicholas doing so busily over there by the cupboard? The children looked in amazement. It was seldom that mother left the snowhouse at any time of day. And here she was, after dark, and Christmas Eve, too, putting on her hood and cape, and pulling on her gauntlets!

"Are you going to drive the reindeer back to the stables?" asked the oldest boy. "Oh, please, let me. Father always lets me, you know."

Mother shook her head. "I'll not be driving them back to the stables until this night's work is done," she said. "If you're awake when we get back, you may do it as always."

How the children stared! "Was little old mother going all alone on that long, wild drive over towns and forests and oceans and up and down chimneys, and goodness knows where, without asking St. Nicholas if she might?

Yes, that was just what she was going to do! "For, when a good thing needs doing," she said brightly, "no permission is needed."

"Keep the fire going, be sure that the baby has the fur rug well up around his chin, and give your father a good breakfast when he wakes," she called over her shoulder and was away out of the door almost before they had realized that she was going. They heard the scampering of the reindeer hoofs, faster the dimmer they got, and then just the stillness of the North pole.

That was last Christmas Eve. And if you ask any child who lay awake to see St. Nicholas, and peeped out with one eye, all the time pretending to be fast asleep, he will tell you that it wasn't St. Nicholas he saw at all. It was just a tiny, sprightly old lady with frosty white curls and a red hood, who filled naughty Willie's stocking just as full as good Marguerite's, and left many more sun-bons in both than was usual. That peeping child will also tell you that before she went back up the chimney, she gave baby a kiss on his pink cheek, a thing St. Nicholas (who is so afraid of babies as a burglar is, and for the same reason) has never been known to do.

And mother, will you believe me, in spite of having stopped to kiss all the babies, was back at the North pole a whole hour earlier than St. Nicholas had ever been able to make it, even in his younger days. Her work was well done, too! But in spite of the early hour, she found the children and her husband waiting for her. St. Nicholas welcomed her back more affectionately than the children.

"I woke in the middle of the night," he said, "out of such a horrid dream—all about crying children and sad mothers. Bless you, good wife, for not letting that dream come true!"

"Oh, don't mention it," said Mother Nicholas. "It was no trouble at all. Indeed, it did me good. I think, father, since you are getting so old, I will take over this job myself from now on."

St. Nicholas looked thoughtful at that. He paced up and down the floor. Then he came and stood in front of Mother Nicholas, straightening up and looking almost as young as in his early days.

"No, mother," he said firmly. "A woman's place is in the home. I'll attend to the business hereafter, thank you."

CENSUS CUTS PRISON SCORE

Federal Institutions Have an Increase, but State, County and City Jails Show Decrease.

NO INMATES IN 1,390 CITIES

Figures Were Obtained as Preliminary to Complete Decennial Census of Prisoners to Be Taken in 1923.

Washington.—The Department of Commerce announces that, according to returns received by the bureau of the census, the number of prisoners confined in federal penitentiaries, state prisons, county jails, state and county chain or road gangs, city police stations, and other penal institutions on July 1, 1922, was 163,889.

Of this number 5,540 were reported for three federal penitentiaries, 78,673 for 104 state prisons, 44,288 for 2,451 county penal institutions (principally jails), 12,717 for 286 chain or road gangs in certain southern states, and 21,635 for 1,810 city institutions, while the remaining 1,041 were women committed by the courts to the care of other institutions (24 in number), mainly under the control of religious or charitable organizations.

Similar data were collected for July 1, 1917, but the total for that date does not include all prisoners in chain or road gangs, nor women committed by the courts to the care of institutions under the control of religious or charitable organizations. Excluding these from the figures for 1922, the comparable totals for the two years are: 1922, 151,172; 1917, 150,186. These figures include prisoners awaiting trial and a few persons held as witnesses, as well as prisoners serving sentence.

Report Part of Big Census.

The returns were obtained in response to a circular of inquiry which the bureau of the census mailed to the various institutions, as a preliminary to the complete decennial census of prisoners, which will be taken in 1923.

The number of prisoners in federal penitentiaries increased from 3,018 on July 1, 1917, to 5,540 on July 1, 1922. During the same period the number of inmates of state prisons increased from 71,442 to 78,673, and of county jails from 41,871 to 44,288, while persons confined in city penal institutions (including police stations) decreased in number from 23,855 to 21,635.

The data as to prisoners in federal and state penal institutions, presumably, are complete and accurate for both 1922 and 1917. The combined total of persons in such institutions increased from 74,460 in 1917 to 84,213 in 1922, the rate of increase being 13.1 per cent.

The rate of increase in federal prisoners was 83.6 per cent; in state prisoners, 10.1 per cent. The ratio of federal prisoners per 100,000 population increased from 3 in 1917 to 5.1 in 1922, and the corresponding ratio for state prisoners increased during the same period from 72.4 to 74.5.

County Figures Uncomparable.

The returns for counties and cities are not comparable for the two years, for the reason that in each case a larger number of institutions is covered for 1922 than for 1917.

The only fair comparison between the county and city figures for the two years is that made with averages based on the total number of institutions for which reports were received (including those reporting no prisoners).

For county institutions the average number of prisoners decreased from 16.2 in 1917 to 14.7 in 1922, and for city institutions it fell from 10.1 in the earlier year to 8 in the later.

The number of empty county jails and other county institutions decreased from 623, or 24.2 per cent of the total for which reports were received, in 1917, to 570, or 18.9 per cent of the total, in 1922. On the other hand, the number of city institutions reporting no prisoners increased from 1,168, or 49.7 per cent of the total, in 1917 to 1,390, or 51.8 per cent of the total, in 1922.

Washing Fluid Poor Seasoning.

Fall River, Mass.—Walents Nowacki knew that something was wrong with him when "his stomach began to burn," according to the story he told the South end police.

He bought what he thought was a bottle of vinegar from a neighboring grocery store and later used some of the contents to season his supper. Investigation showed that the fluid he had swallowed was a washing fluid and a stomach pump was put into operation.

SCIENCE BARES SECRET

Cause of Gravitation Is Discovered by Professor See.

Problem Has Baffled Scientists Since Newton Established Law of Gravitation 235 Years Ago—Result of Long Study.

San Francisco, Cal.—The cause of gravitation, which has baffled scientists since Newton established the law of gravitation 235 years ago, has been discovered by Prof. T. J. J. See, government astronomer at Mare Island, according to an announcement made by Professor See in an address before the California Academy of Sciences.

Professor See announced he had discovered the cause of magnetism and of universal gravitation, and he said he was also able to prove that the two magnetic poles were at unequal depths in the earth.

In completion of 40 years of research on magnetism and gravitation, Professor See declared that the cause of magnetism lay in the action of ether waves considerably longer than those of light and heat, and asserted there was a connection between magnetism and universal gravitation which definitely proved that gravitation was also due to similar waves in the ether traveling across the heavenly spaces with the velocity of light.

The processes of attraction under the wave action of magnetism and of gravitation are totally invisible, said Professor See, whose explanation of his discovery was substantially as follows:

The lines of force around a magnet were first studied by the celebrated English natural philosopher Faraday nearly a century ago; and while Faraday believed that magnetic inductive action might be conveyed along these curved lines of force, he could not prove it. Action of physical forces in straight lines has, therefore, continued to be adopted by all authorities, including Gauss himself, author of the celebrated "Mathematical Theory of the Earth's Magnetism," 1838.

But now, 84 years later than Gauss, Professor See proves that the magnetic lines of force are vertical elements in ether, and thus are the rotation axis of the whole body of waves proceeding from a magnet.

Professor See submitted experimental demonstrations of this wave theory of magnetism, showing that when a small magnet is suspended by a thread near a larger one the small magnet is pulled bodily toward the nearest pole of the large magnet.

WHITE CHILD VOODOO VICTIM

Body Found in Cuba With Heart Torn Out by Witch Doctors, Say Authorities.

Santa Cruze del Sur.—Discovery of the mutilated body of Cuca Gonsales Lisea; the five-year-old white child who disappeared a few days before, and an autopsy performed later, disclosed that the little girl undoubtedly was the victim of witch doctors.

The authorities express the belief that the child was kidnaped and her heart torn out to be used in voodoo practices. They assert they have evidence that the crime was the result of negro sorcerers' attempt to cure the wife of one of the employees of the sugar central, Tamaqueyesk, located near here, of tuberculosis. One of the half-dozen suspects being held in Camaguey, a Haitian, it is added, is suspected of being the voodoo leader.

RAT ATTACKS SLEEPING MAN

Infuriated Animal Makes Wound in Man's Neck Within Half Inch of Jugular Vein.

Wilmington, Del.—William W. Windsor was the victim of the attack of an infuriated rat while sleeping in the rear of his photographic studio the other night.

Windsor was first awakened by a noise and, flashing a light, saw a rat dragging away an apple which had been taken from a bag in the room. He placed the apples in a safe place and then hung the apple which the rat had striven to make off with from string from the ceiling, but out of the animal's reach.

Later he was awakened from his sleep by a stinging sensation in his neck and, brushing his hand across his face, touched the rat, which had inflicted a flesh wound. The wound was within a half inch of the man's jugular vein. Mr. Windsor's daughter died several years ago after having been bitten by a rat.

Sauerkraut's Pal Hard Hit.

Washington.—High prices for hot dogs have hit Germany, the Commerce department has been advised by Consul John A. Scott at Dresden. The consumer places the blame on the butchers, he says, while the latter condemn the slaughter houses. Beef, mutton and pork have risen more than 100 per cent in the last sixty days, while slaughter-house fees have risen 200 per cent.

COF IN LEAD AS FARM CROP

Only 10 Per Cent of the Entire Product Is Consumed by Human Beings.

IMPORTANT GIFT TO WORLD

Consumed Either Directly or in Form of Meat It Is the Principal Source of the Nation's Food Supply.

Washington.—Corn, the red man's gift to the white man, has come to be the nation's most important farm crop. Consumed either directly or in the form of meat and other animal products, it is the principal source of the nation's food supply.

The 1921 year book of the Department of Agriculture shows just to what extent the 300,000,000-bushel crop forms the basis of the live-stock industry. Forty per cent of the crop is fed to swine on farms, 30 per cent to horses and mules on farms and 15 per cent to cattle on farms. Only 10 per cent is used direct for human food.

Corn was one of the most important gifts America made to the rest of the world. The United States now produces about three-fourths of the world's corn crop. That corn also is an important crop in Argentina, Brazil, Mexico and some of the southern European countries, is shown in the report.

Disease Regulates Crop.

Weather, insects and plant diseases have a great deal to do with regulating the size of the crop in the United States. The estimated loss caused by common smut alone during the period 1917-1920, was placed at about eighty millions of bushels annually. Of insect pests the corn ear worm, where abundant, causes a loss of at least 7 per cent of the grain on the ears attacked. The European corn borer also threatens to take a heavy toll.

It is stated the production of the corn crop is financed with less borrowed capital than is the case with other staple farm crops. The reason for this is that the farmer's income is distributed throughout the year more evenly than is the case in many other sections, and because the direct investment in the crop consists more of the farmer's own labor and less of purchased material and equipment than is the case in many other crops.

Get Book From Congressmen.

The year book, which is obtainable through congressional representatives from the department, contains much data of interest and value to producers, including chapters on production costs and figures, financing and advice on production according to seasonal supply and demand.

WOMAN CAN'T WED UNTIL 1925

New Haven Divorcee Strikes Snag in Massachusetts Law—Loser to Hit.

New Haven, Conn.—Miss Lillian Peterson, who was married to Sidney Isaacs the day after her divorce from Bob Pickett, and now seeks to have the second ceremony annulled so that she can return to Massachusetts, is meeting great obstacles in the Bay state laws.

Believing that she could legally marry in Massachusetts six months after getting a divorce decree, Miss Peterson announced that she would have her premature marriage annulled and wed Isaacs all over again in six months. Now she finds that the laws of Massachusetts forbid one losing a divorce suit to marry within two years and six months.

The party that wins the suit may marry after six months, but as a penalty the court inflicts two years additional upon the loser.

Hunts Coyotes With Club.

Iron Mountain, Mich.—Over at Rapid City there is an owner of a pool-room, named Smith, who takes a club and goes out "coyoting" every once in a while just for a little pastime and amusement. Last week he clubbed two coyotes to death and trapped a red fox. It is not a dangerous pastime, according to Smith, for he says coyotes are cowards and won't attack unless there is a gang of them. In the last few years Smith has killed 28 wolves and coyotes.

He Buries $1,350 in Jar; Worms Dine; Cash Gone

Toledo, O.—Two years ago, Pete Pullos, railroad section foreman, became worried over national financial conditions and withdrew his life's savings, $1,350, from a local bank and buried it in an earthen jar.

The other day Pullos decided the banks were all right again, and dug up the jar. In the bottom of the partly disintegrated receptacle was a mass of bill fragments, chewed by worms.

Pullos hurried to a downtown bank with the remnants of his small fortune, where expert money handlers tried to patch up the pieces, but to no avail.

CAVE MAN IS RIDDLE

Wife Charges Him With Series of Forgotten Crimes.

Human Enigma in Jail in New Jersey Is Now Blamed for Shooting for Which Half-Brother Served Sentence.

Philadelphia.—Like a "hairy ape," both in appearance and in his rebellion against society, like a Robison Crusoe in his self-sufficiency, with something of a cave man's characteristics in his disregard of clothes and comforts, William Ware, dragged from his cave near Stratford, N. J., is an enigma in Camden county jail.

He is a veritable human riddle, the solution of which may mean the unraveling of a number of long-forgotten crime mysteries in New Jersey ranging from petty thievery to heinous outrages.

Most of the allegations of crime against Ware of the woods are made by his wife.

For some time the county authorities had been receiving complaints from farmers of a "wild man" who terrorized them and their women folk, although no specific acts were alleged against him.

When they saw Mrs. Ware she showed them a letter she had begun, setting forth the complaints against her husband. Among the things she alleges is that about eight years ago Ware shot a man, but eluded detectives. His half-brother, a man named Hinkle, was blamed and served a sentence for the shooting. She also avers her husband had some connection with a jewel robbery, 18 years ago, in which the jewels were afterward recovered from an underground cache. She is, however, weak on details. Her husband, she said, was the brother of John Ware, the first man hanged in Camden county's old jail. But the detectives say William is John Ware's nephew, not brother.

William Ware is intelligent and talks well. He says he is no criminal and resents being taken to jail, although he did not offer physical resistance.

He wore only trousers and shoes when they found him in his cave. The hair on his chest is two inches long and few chimpansees can boast more fierry forearms. His chest and upper arms bulged with great muscles. He is one of the most skilful wielders of an ax among the woodsmen of south Jersey.

FISHMONGER DIES A BARONET

Sir George Sleight Accumulated $5,000,000 From Humble Start in England.

London.—America furnishes many instances of millionaires who rose from the ranks, but it is doubtful if even in America a millionaire ever made such a humble start in life as did Sir George Frederick Sleight, first baronet of Wetherby hall, Great Grimsby, who has just died leaving a fortune of nearly $5,000,000.

Sir George began earning his living as a boy by gathering shellfish on Cleethorpes beach and hawking them through the town. He rose finally to be the largest individual owner of steam trawlers in the country. The latter part of his career was used during the war for mine-sweeping and submarine patrolling. For the services he rendered the country in this way he was made a baronet, and the conferring of the title provoked no such scandal as has grown out of the award of many honors in recent years.

GIVE PRIZE DOG NEW GLANDS

"Alibi Billy," Winner at 58 Shows, Has Operation to Give Him New Life Lease.

Taylorville, Ill.—"Alibi Billy," prize beagle hound and winner in fifty-eight dog shows in the central west, has another lease on youth and another claim to fame as the result of an operation for the transplantation of glands. In the opinion of local dog fanciers he is one of the finest prize dogs to share with man this new mode of rejuvenation.

"Alibi Billy" is owned by W. A. Powell of Taylorville. He is twelve years old and that in the realm of dogdom is more than middle-aged. Because his twelve years have given him a rank in bench and field track shows that is said to be second to none in his class, his owner secured a surgeon and had the operation performed. It is believed it will be successful.

SEEK MISER'S HIDDEN GOLD

Searchers, Encouraged by Finding Small Sums Hoarded, Upset Farm in Missouri.

St. Charles, Mo.—Searchers were scouring the farm of William Schone, seventy-nine-year-old recluse, who recently committed suicide, for hidden wealth.

Schone was reported to be wealthy and distrustful of banks. The searchers were encouraged by several recent findings. William Meers purchased a cupboard from the administrator for $1 and after taking it home found $560 hidden in it. He turned the money over to the administrator.

The other day three men found two cans in Schone's shed. One contained $50 and the other $83 and $700 in checks. In a wooden box $370 was found.

Attempt to Block Commissioner-Elect Westlake from Assuming Office

Defeated in his application to Secretary of State Harvey C. Smith that the latter refuse to commission Milton W. Westlake as county commissioner, to which office Westlake was elected in November, retiring Commission John W. Scott, Saturday, brought suit in common pleas court to enjoin Westlake from taking office.

Smith refused to withhold Westlake's commission on the strength of an opinion given out by Attorney General John G. Price in which Westlake and other commissioners elected in November are held to be entitled to serve their terms.

The election of Mr. Westlake and other candidates for the office in a majority of the counties of the state was attacked by Scott, whom Westlake defeated for the nomination last August. Scott questions the constitutionality of the act passed by the legislature in 1919 providing that the commissioner elected in 1920 receiving the lowest number of [illegible] three should serve [illegible] months.

[illegible], 1923 in order to provide an entirely new board being elected each four years. Two new commissioners will be elected in 1924. The successor to the commissioner elected this year will be elected in 1926.

To raise his point, Commissioner Scott goes back to the 1918 election when he declares he was elected a member of the board of county commissioners for two years and "until his successor was elected and qualified". He declares that the election of 1920, when the new law became effective, was illegal for the reason that in order to shift the time of taking office from Sept. 1 to the first Monday in January the legislature made his term of office but 19 months instead of for an even number of years as required by the constitution.

He alleges in his petition as filed by Attorneys Ballard and Jones, that it follows that elections held under the new law were illegal and that consequently the legal election was in 1919 and inasmuch as he was elected then until his "successor was legally elected and qualified" he is still the commissioner notwithstanding the election of last month, which gave the office to Westlake.

Attorney General Price is a law partner of Ballard and Jones but did not participate in the suit.

The members of the Hilltop Embroidery club spent Christmas visiting each member's home on the Hilltop and two in Arlington and one in Clintonville at the home of Dr. Shaffer spending the evening there. One of their visits on the Hilltop, was at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Fox. As this was the 10th anniversary of Dr. and Mrs. Fox's wedding, the ladies remembered them in the way of a "tin" shower which consisted of egg beaters (for either fresh or storage eggs) flour sifters, cake turners, tin buckets tin pudding pans, and [illegible] we suppose "tin Lizzies" too. Anyone having dental fillings done at Dr. Fox's office had better "look a little out", as they might get tin fillings while the supply lasts.

Celebrate Their 50th Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. John Lehnert, of 65 South Warren Avenue, celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary Tuesday, December 26th. Their children, six daughters and one son gathered at the home and spent a pleasant afternoon and evening. Also many friends called wishing the happy couple many more years of happiness. Mr. Lehnert is 74 years of age and Mrs. Lehnert is 71 years. They have 30 grandchildren, all of whom are living in Franklin county.

The members of the Elite Embroidery Club held there Christmas party at the home Mrs. Nell Spencer, North Burgess, at delicious lunch was served by the hostess. And many beautiful presents were exchanged. Those being present were, Mrs. O. Spencer, Mrs. George Ray and daughter Dora, Mrs. M. W. Bents, Mrs. O. Jenkins and daughter Elaine, Mrs. Frank Wilkins, Mrs. Elsa Jenkins, Mrs. Robert Bigler, Miss Nell Spencer, Mrs. Fisher and Mrs. C. Houdasheit.

Pelican Pecks

THE PELICAN doesn't believe strongly in New Year's resolutions unless an attempt is made to keep them, however, here goes:

Resolved, that if a man lives on the Hilltop he ought to support its business and be proud of his community. Wags are asked to move elsewhere!

Resolved, 1923 can be the most prosperous year in any ones life—if—

Resolved, that stores selling tobacco and cigarettes to Minors should be punished with the full fine!

Resolved, that myself along with all others, needs to count up the good things and "that a grumbler verily has his reward".

Resolved, that BOOTLEGGING must be punished or it will be the biggest business in the United States.

Resolved, that he who wastes his time today, will live his future peace to pay.

Resolved, that Santa Claus was good to most and never seems to run out of good things. Children ought to be better for their gifts.

Resolved, that Skipstop, Library, clean alleys, paved Broad Street, new streets, more lights and many more improvements MUST come this year to the Hilltop.

Happy New Year to all.

THE PELICAN.

Wishing You a Happy and Prosperous New Year

ONE-TON CANDLE FOR CARUSO

Sixteen-Foot Memorial Taper Made in New York Designed to Last Eighteen Centuries.

New York.—A candle of chemically treated beeswax, five feet in circumference at the base, 16 feet high and weighing one ton, known as the Enrico Caruso memorial candle, has just been completed in the studios of Antonio Ajello & Bro., and will be shipped to Pompeii, Italy, within a few days. It cost $3,700 and was made on the order of an orphan asylum in New York of which Caruso was a generous benefactor.

The candle will be placed in the Church of Our Lady of Pompeii, where Caruso last worshiped. It is intended to last 18 centuries, burning, at the suggestion of Cardinal Vanutelli, 24 hours on each All Souls' day, which falls on November 2.

FORTUNE FOR COURTESIES

Marjorie Rambeau, Actress, Check Boy and 100 Others Share in $250,000 Estate of Californian.

San Francisco. — Actresses, bootblacks, waiters, physicians, judges and society women—in fact, everyone who left a good impression on the soul of a man who remembered little acts of kindness and courtesy—were beneficiaries in the will of the late Joseph Biagne, whose $250,000 estate was ordered distributed to 102 persons.

Among them are Marjorie Rambeau, actress, who will receive $1,400, and Harry Morgan, check boy in San Francisco, who gets $700. Biagno was a bachelor clubman. Many of the persons remembered in his will he saw only once in his lifetime.

The Record for Next Year

Christmas is over—hope you had a happy one. This is the last week of 1922—next Monday is New Year's Day. We wish every Hilltop person an abundance of happiness, prosperity and health during the next year, and for years to come.

We feel that we've did our best during the past year to make the Hilltop Record a better paper than it was during the previous year, and to a certain extent have succeeded in doing so, but we have never begun a year with as good facilities, good equipment and prospects as this new year. Our mechanical facilities are greatly increased whereby we can not only produce a better paper, but a larger one. Then we have secured the services of Mr. Frank A. Doty, well known to many Hilltop people, to assist in taking care of the news and advertising department of the Record. Mr. Doty has had considerable experience as a writer in the past, and has a way of telling things happening that cannot help commanding the attention and interest of any reader. We have had several years of co-working with him, and feel certain he will add greatly to the Record's news columns in the future.

Mrs. Ditrick, who has faithfully and efficiently labored in the subscription department during the past three years, will continue to do so in the future. We certainly have appreciated Mrs. Ditrick's efforts, and believe all of our patrons who have come in contact with her have found her to be courteous and obliging in all her undertakings.

We have at different times met with complaints from our subscribers about not getting their paper regularly. That is one of the biggest problems we have had to contend with. But we now believe we have as good a set of carrier boys as can be gotten together. True, there's misses sometimes but they are now less frequent than they have ever been. Anyone missing their paper is solicited to report the same to the office on Friday morning and we will supply them as soon as possible.

Our added facilities have entailed a greatly increased expense; We are not asking much for subscription to the paper (50 cents a year); surely no one can say we are "profiteering" on that. Nor are we expecting to increase the subscription rates, but we ARE asking for a larger subscription list; and we believe we are justified in in doing so. We are promising the Hilltop people a very greatly improved paper for next year, both in news and literary features, and we are going to do our best to fulfill this promise, but we ask the co-operation of every Hilltop person to help us make this a fact.

We are expecting to give every Hilltop home a chance to become a subscriber to the Record, and during the next few weeks a representative of the paper will call on each home who is not a subscriber and hope he will be cordially received and be given permission to [illegible] the paper regularly wherever he calls.

We also ask your co-operation in sending in any news items of interest which you may know of. Send in not later than 11:30 Wednesday of each week for publication in the current issue.

Begin the new year right—trade at Seiller's.

Dr. O. E. McFadon, an Osteopathic Physician of 15 years experience, has located on the Hilltop at 2393½ West Broad St. Dr. McFadon has been with Dr. Hulett at 8 East Broad St. the past four years and is already known by some of our citizens.

You'll do better at Seiller's after all.

Lest Meyers, who sells candy etc. in wheel chair on the Hilltop, was struck by an automobile at Broad and Oakley Tuesday night, and suffered bruises.

The Little Story That's True

This was told us by a Hilltop man who was there:

Once there was an excursion train taking Columbus people to a city some distance to the north of us. Everything was proceeding nicely when suddenly the train met with an accident and was badly wrecked. During the excitement when passengers were busily engaged in extracting themselves from the wrecked coaches, or assisting the injured, a man seeing a woman excitedly running back and forth on top of one of the coaches ran to her assistance, when she yelled at him: "I'm going to faint! I'm going to faint!" He called to her, saying "That's no place to faint up there." Whereupon she answered, " All right" and climbed down off the coach.

On the same occasion a large colored woman was seen trying to extract herself from the coach by attempting to climb through the window, but her size prevented her doing so to any advantage; and when she was about half way through, a man seeing her condition, hurriedly grabbed her by the feet and started pulling her back, she all the while yelling and kicking to beat the band.

SPECIAL NEW YEAR'S SERIES

At Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church the pastor, Rev. Richard E. Shields will begin a series of sermons the first Sunday in January on the general subject, "Living Men, Great and Good." The Sunday School orchestra will play and it is hoped that a children's chorus will sing in addition to other special music by Miss Jeannette Trone and others of the congregation. The dates and subjects follow:

January 7, "Three American Inventors;" January 14, "Three American Poets;" January 21, "Three American Novelists;" January 28, (morning) "Three British Statesmen," (evening) "The Oberamergau Passion Play 1922," illustrated with beautiful hand colored slides of this year's performance; February 4, "Three Great Preachers;" February 11 (morning), "Three American Statesmen;" (evening) Illustrated lecture of interest to all; February 21, an extra sermon dealing with "Well's Six Greatest Men of History."

Can you guess who the three inventors will be? or the three British Statesmen? or the three living Poets? These sermons will be not only full of information but will deal with the character vital elements which make these men great and good.

In some cases very personal factors will be brought out and this alone will make them interesting to all. You are invited to come and enjoy these Sabbath evenings together, (only two sermons in the morning as indicated) and also to invite your friends.

We welcome you to all our services.

According to a statement issued by the Ford Motor Company, deliveries of Ford cars and trucks to retail buyers during the month of November totaled 106,327. This is a new high sales record that has never before been approached by the Company at this season of the year and one which stands out in marked contrast to the November, 1921, retail delivery figures which totaled slightly over 58,000 cars and trucks. From April 1st of this year retail deliveries have exceeded 100,000 Ford cars and trucks each month. Credit for this remarkable showing is attributed by the Ford Motor Company to the many improvements which have lately been made on Ford cars and particularly to the new low level of Ford prices, recently put into effect.

CUT HIGHWAY ACROSS JUNGLE

First Road to the North Coast Runs Through Santo Domingo Republic.

OPENS UP RICH TERRITORY

Cuts Off From Ten to Twelve Days of Long and Tortuous Journey From San Domingo City to New York.

New York.—For the first time since Christopher Columbus landed on the island of Haiti a road has been opened in the Dominican republic from Santo Domingo on the south to Puerto Plata on the northern side of the island, thus connecting the two principal seaports of the republic and opening to cultivation some of the richest agricultural lands on the island. Incidentally the new highway cuts off from ten to twelve days of the long and tortuous journey from Santo Domingo City to New York.

American marines, in the times when they were not busy maintaining order in the disturbed republic, have built this highway, which holds out rich promise for the future development of the island. About 150 miles long, it puts Puerto Plata on the north and Santo Domingo City on the south in close touch with coastwise shipping on both the Atlantic and Caribbean. Freight and passenger traffic from Santo Domingo City, on the Caribbean, which heretofore had to be carried around the south, east and northern ends of the island to Puerto Plata before going north, a journey of from ten to twelve days, may now in a few hours proceed over the new road to Puerta Plata for shipment.

Columbus Church Stands.

When Columbus landed on the site of Santo Domingo City in 1509 he founded the church of San Nikolo, which is still in existence. Now the missionaries of the Episcopal church in the Dominican republic, in commemoration of the completion of the new highway, are establishing another church at Puerto Plata. Land has been secured and in a few months the new edifice will be dedicated by way of completing the link between the two sections of the republic.

Under the Rt. Rev. Charles B. Colmore, D. D., Episcopal missionary bishop of Porto Rico and the Dominican republic, Archdeacon William Wyllie and his wife have been the leaders in the movement to establish the new church, and Mrs. Wyllie enjoys the distinction of being the first woman to make the journey over the new highway from Santo Domingo City to Puerto Plata. Mrs. Wyllie who has just passed through New York on her way back to Dominica, having made the journey from the island to Portland, Ore., and back to attend the Episcopal general convention, is one of the busiest individuals in the little West Indian republic. In addition to her missionary duties, she manages the United States government hospital in Dominica and, in a manner of speaking, has presided as master of ceremonies at the birth of all the army children who have been born in Dominica since the beginning of the American occupation. She was the only nurse on the island when the influenza epidemic broke there and has endeared herself to the entire population, native and foreign alike, by her ministrations.

Pilots Ships to Harbor.

Archdeacon Wyllie, her husband, is similarly busily employed. Doctor Wyllie is one of those who have carried practical experience with life into the missionary service. At one time in his career he was an engineer on a Scotch tramp ship in West Indian waters. He is credited with knowing more about the Dominican coast than any other man south of the Florida straits, and on frequent occasions when he is coasting about on missionary trips he is called from his bunk during the late and early watches to take the helm and guide the ship through dangerous reefs into port.

Find Skeleton of Slain Indians.

Beacon, N. Y.—Excavating for the new government hospital for disabled soldiers at Chelsea, near here, workmen dug up three Indian skeletons. There was a stone arrow head in the chest of each. The spot was on the old headquarters of the Wapingers. The skeletons will be sent to the National museum.

Texan Spends 37 Days Plowing Single Furrow

D. D. Holcomb of Amarillo, Tex., is quite a "plowboy." He has just completed what is believed to be the longest continuous furrow ever attempted. The furrow is 200 miles long, running from Shattuck, Okla., diagonally across the Texas panhandle to Clovis, N. M. It and another, parallel to it, were plowed along the Santa Fe right-of-way to prevent a spread of fire. Thirty-seven days were required to complete the job. Ten mules, three men, two disk plows and a chuck wagon were used in the enterprise.

HAITI GIRLS ROLL 'EM

Short Skirts Also Long Fashion Among Island Belles

Away Back in 1915 the Peasant Woman Began to "Roll Her Own"—Possession of Shoes and Stockings Marks Social Standing.

Cape Haitien.—Haiti often has been referred to as a backward nation, but in dress the Haitien woman of the predominating peasant class long anticipated the American flapper in two of her most distinctive traits. Short skirts and the trick of "rolling her own" were adopted here long before the flapper took them to her heart. Short skirts are a necessity to the woman who passes her days toiling in a garden or riding a burro. They were them short in Haiti when Andrew Jackson was in the White House, and the style has not changed.

It was in 1915 that the peasant woman began to "roll her own." In that year the occupation forces of American marines and shore-leave parties of bluejackets brought a golden trail of American coin to the impoverished island. Regiments and ships bought freely in the markets and the women reaped the benefit.

Haiti is a country of caste, and the possession of shoes and stockings marks a decided social advantage for the peasant class. They invested their earnings in them, but drew the line at garters, and necessity taught them a substitute.

There is one distinctive feature of woman's dress in Haiti peasant circles, however, that will hardly find favor in the sophisticated eyes of the American flapper. Frequently one sees among the universal faded blue and white attire one of red, white and blue, with the three colors arranged in fantastic patterns of stripes and squares, usually topped by a bright red bandanna turban. A peasant woman thus arrayed, accustomed to carry burdens on her head from infancy, strides along in this gay costume with the carriage of a Greek goddess. She is a "penitente" who has broken one of the laws of the peasant code of conduct and her self-selected costume openly proclaims to her sisters that she has backslidden from their curious code and is paying the penalty by public penance.

HUBBY'S VALUE $1, SAYS WILL

New York Woman Calls Helpmate "Worthless" and Leaves Small Bequest.

New York.—"I give and bequeath to John Klaus of the said town of Mount Pleasant, my worthless husband, the sum of $1."

Thus read the will of Mrs. Caroline Klaus, just filed for probate in White Plains.

Surrogate Slater stated the testatrix left an estate valued at $5,000, which will be divided among her children, grandchildren and distant relatives. Mrs. Klaus was an old resident of Hawthorne, in Mount Pleasant township. She referred to her husband in this one clause only.

Mexican Shoe Industry Booms.

Mexico City.—The younger generation in Mexico is being taught to wear shoes and the "barefoot boy with cheeks of tan" is decreasing in numbers, if statistics compiled by the American chamber of commerce of Mexico are correct. Not only have importations of footwear from the United States increased, it is said, but during the last two years several shoe factories have started in Mexico

Impulse Dodd's Christmas

F. H. Sweet

TOMMY Dodd, "Impulse Dodd," cattleman, was in Chicago, with his big sale over. And even in Chicago, where sight-seeing cattlemen were common, Impulse Dodd was a noticeable figure, with his six feet odd, free money ways, and almost perpetual smile.

He paused in front of a small, narrow store, whose one window was full of toys. Inside, the counter and shelves were packed with the same kind of goods.

"Just Santa," said Impulse, aloud. "B'lieve I'll go in."

He closed his fingers tightly and pushed open the door with his thumb, stiffly extended.

"Put in his thumb," he grinned, "and—does he pull out a plum?"

In the shop were two men, the one in front of the counter loud-voiced and threatening. "Well," this one was finishing, as Impulse entered, "I'll give you just two more days to meet your bill, till the day after Christmas. If you don't pay me in full then, I will take possession."

As the man stalked out, Impulse raised his right foot and swung it back and forth thoughtfully.

"Can I show you anything, sir?" he asked a moment later, as Impulse turned to the counter with a half-regretful frown on his face, adding: "It's just as well you didn't do it, sir. He's a very vindictive man."

"That so? Then I sure wish I had. I don't generally hold back on things, but this city's getting me right scared. I've reined up unusual the last three days. Now 'bout the toys. That man's talk is so easy unraveled. I reckon you'll sell cheap?"

"At almost your own price, sir. There is only this one day to sell, and I can't hope to do enough. I've seen failure for a week past, though for a while I did hope to come out in condition to start again. Now what can I show you?"

"Well, not only one solitary thing in particular, I reckon," scanning the shelves judicially. "They all look right enticing, and what I didn't buy would make me feel sorty to look at. What'll you take for the bunch?"

The storekeeper moved along the counter, trying to arrange his goods more attractively.

"Look around all you want to," he said amiably. "And there is an easy chair back yonder where you can sit and rest, if you like."

Impulse followed him.

"No wonder you can't sell, if you treat all customers like me," he complained. "Now, see here," slapping a big roll of bills on the counter. "How much? Remember there's only one day for selling Santa stuff."

"How Much," Demanded Impulse.

"Do you mean business?" asked the shopkeeper, a sudden huskiness coming into his voice.

"How much?"

"Fifteen hundred, if you mean the cost. But I warn you it's too late to sell much—"

"Oh, I'm sure a hustler down home," cheerfully, "and I've a bunch I can move Santa goods tolerable brisk the day before the day. Now let's see, fifteen, with a fair per cent for profit and a little for good will makes it just two thousand. There you are," peeling off another bill or two, and then replacing the roll in his pocket. "Now you've got to throw in your services as clerk for the rest of the day."

"But I can't—" began the dazed shopkeeper. But Impulse was at the door.

"Back right soon," he called. "Be getting the goods ready to handle quick."

Outside, Impulse glanced up and down the street. Half a dozen urchins were playing on the sidewalk, two or three were hanging behind a dray, a newsboy was crying his papers. Other youngsters were dimly seen among pedestrians and street vehicles. Impulse put two fingers into his mouth and blew a blast that would cover a mile on the prairie. At the same time the other hand was coming from his pocket with all the coins his fingers could grasp. These were tossed into the air. By the time they had ceased jingling on the sidewalk, fifty more or less grimy little hands were clutching for them.

"Now, you bunch," called Impulse, "just listen to me for a minute. Who's the most no 'count boy in this neighborhood?"

"Crawfish Bobby," answered a voice promptly. "He never stands treat, an' carries every cent home to his ma-a-a."

"And the most unpopular girl?"

There was a short silence, then several of the boys tittered.

"Raggy Sally," said one of them. "She's Peanut Seller Bet's girl, an' when we boys throw mud she fights like a wildcat."

"And gives all of you a mighty good drubbing, I hope," commented Impulse. "Now, boys, the two who bring Crawfish Bobby and Raggy Sally to me get a four-bit piece each, and tell them they'll get another for coming. Now, the lot of you come back, for the show isn't half over."

Ten minutes later, Crawfish Bobby and Raggy Sally stood in front of him. Impulse placed a hand upon a shoulder of each.

"These two are going to be little Santas and give you all a right nice present by and by," he called to the rapidly increasing crowd of urchins. "Mind, you'll owe it in part to them. Now stampede into the streets and alleys of the neighborhood and corral every boy and girl you can find, and bring 'em here. Just an hour from now this store'll commence to give out presents, and you'll all get one. Nobody will be missed. Hit the street now, the whole lot of you except these two."

"Mr. Santa Claus, I Believe Sir," She Began.

In an hour, the door was thrown open and the rush began, with half a thousand whooping youngsters to make the assault. It was short work, the pillaging of the store, and in forty minutes all was over. And then, just as the hilarious present bearers were scattering into every street and alley an automobile swerved out from the street traffic and stopped at the curb. In it were an old gentleman and a lady and several girls. The gentleman motioned some of the urchins to the side of the car, where they were questioned as to the extraordinary spectacle. Then a few words passed between the occupants of the car, after which one of the girls alighted and came to the store. Crawfish Bobby and Raggy Sally were just outside the door, with their arms full.

"You're the little Santa's," smiled the young lady, as she took their hands, "and I just know you had a big time." Then she entered the store and went straight to Impulse.

"Mr. Santa Claus, I believe, sir?" she began.

"Why—er—no," stammered Impulse turning red, "only—er—just as a sort of advance agent, named Impulse—I mean Tommy Dodd."

The girl broke into a ringing laugh.

"Impulse! I like that," she cried. "Now, Impulse Dodd, have you any definite arrangement for the Christmas holidays—any binding engagement, I mean?"

"N-o-o, nothing except to tramp sidewalks and say 'Howdy' to every stranger who'll let me."

"Good! Then there's nothing in the way of our invitation. You see, we're having a houseful of company for the holiday week, and papa and mamma suggested that I ask you. Papa owns a ranch out West, and he says he knows how a stranger must feel in a city at Christmas time, and he thinks a man who can do what you've just done will certainly be an acquisition to our party. And I may add we all feel the same way. You'll come? There is room in our machine."

Impulse nodded. He lacked words fitting to the occasion. A week at a house party! Gee! wouldn't that be stuff to tell the boys at the ranch. Start back the day after Christmas! Who? He? No, siree! That would be rank foolishness. Not till the last gun was fired.

So he walked out to the automobile with the girl, with never a thought of the emptied store behind, or of the beaming, misty-eyed man who could now stock up again without the baleful skeleton of a creditor to glare at him over the goods. And as Dodd entered the automobile, one of the girls afterwards declared that she heard him murmur, "And pulled out a plum," though she could not understand why. It was just one of his funny ways.

Prohibition officers who search the wooded hills near Parkersburg, W. Va., for moonshiners declare that these liquor makers are using skunks to defeat the ends of justice. Officers Bee and Summers reported that they destroyed one distillery and broke up a skunk kennel, and that they found evidences of other distillers who were using polecats to scent the scenery and thus prevent "dry" agents from smelling the brewing operations.

Many Boast of It But Lack It

To be ready for unexpected things is the most common evidence of forethought. Rainy days come to all. This applies to institutions as well as individuals.

Institutions as well as individuals should earn a reasonable profit in order to lay aside sufficient reserve.

By paying 5% on deposits and loaning at 6½% we deal fairly with the people and at the same time have laid aside a reserve of almost $700,000.00 for protection against losses should any occur.

Pelican Pecks

WHAT IS A DUMB-BELL?

Why, a Dumb-bell is:

That man who looks for a leak in the gas-line with a match.

Or that fellow who jay-walks and then blames the motorist for nearly running him down.

Or that woman who gives all the neighborhood secrets away and then wonders why she has so few friends.

Or that boy who goes every night or so to the movies and wonders why his marks aren't as high as others.

Why, a Dumb-bell is:

A man who sleeps in a room with windows down and an open gas stove burning monoxide gas and a crepe.

Or the chap who swears at his Ford 'cause it won't start when he has forgotten to turn on the switch.

Or that family which has taxes to pay and all the budget is used up on Christmas bills.

The Dumb-bell Family is very large —There is:

The young fellow who courts a girl and tells her how late he sleeps in the A. M. and what he does in the P. M., and wonders why she jilts him.

Or that girl who bobs the uppertory and jazzes the lower flat, and rouges her beak and cheek, and wonders why it is so hard to get a job!

Yes, and there is the printer who when you give him the correct copy makes a bull.

Or the banker who totals your account with one left handed figure left off.

Verily the way of the Dumb-bell is hard and they that continue therein —they get an extra jolt.

Just received a shipment of American Salted Peanuts, also almonds, of Spain, and Love nuts from Turkey. Come in and look them over. You sure will like them. Mrs. Dulgar's Restaurant.

A COOL RECEPTION

Dr. Fox and Fred L. Sietsberger are not enthusiastic in the account of their hunting trip on New Year's Day. After motoring to Canal Winchester they hit for Big Walnut where they discovered too much water for the doctor's leaky boots. Like a loyal friend, Fred offered to ferry the doctor across the creek, first steppin in to sound the depths, he found the bottom was about five feet from the top. The doctor, true to the profession, came to the rescue, applied the first aid remedies, hurried the patient to the nearest relief station, where he was warmed and dried. Oh, yes; ask them about the game.

Mr. Hayden Jones, 109 Midland Ave., became affiliated with the West Side Lumber Co. on January 1st as manager of the Department of Builders' Supplies, which has just been added to that company's fast growing business. Mr. Jones is a new accession to the Hilltop, having just recently moved here from Van Wert, O. The Hilltop Record welcomes him to our community and to the association of the Hilltop business family.

Voss Brothers' opening last Saturday was a most enthusiastic success. About 2,500 people visited the new plant during the evening. An orchestra furnished music for the merry crowd. Refreshments, souvenirs and a guessing contest were some of the features. They report the sale of cars for the month of December exceeded all expectations. In the guessing contest, on the number of Ford parts in a glass bowl, ticket number 571 drew the prize.

Bids will be opened January 8 for a new cottage for defective delinquent girls for the Columbus Institution for Feeble Minded. The new cottage will cost $140,000.

We desire to extend our heartfelt thanks to our friends and neighbors for their sympathy and kindness at the death of our darling baby, also Rev. Stimmel for his words of comfort and the neighbors and Cradle Roll and others for their beautiful floral offerings.—Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Ogdin.

Milton W. Westlake, former city councilman and successful candidate at the election last November, will be seated as county commissioner, succeeding John Scott, by the decision of the Ohio Supreme Court, sustaining the law under which the county commissioners are elected. Mr. Westlake began his duties as commissioner Wednesday. He was given an eulogistic send-off by city council at their session Tuesday evening. The following resolution was introduced by Councilman Worley, and passed with unusual enthusiasm:

"That the sincere thanks of the council are hereby extended Mr. Westlake for his faithful, honest and efficient service during his several terms as a member of this body, and we hereby express our deep appreciation for the honorable service that Mr. Westlake has rendered the city."

Councilman Worley, in speaking on the resolution, said: "It is often said that this political body is a political graveyard. But the people have recognized Mr. Westlake by electing him to an office where he has wider field to work. I believe council has lost a competent, honest and efficient member."

The friends of Mr. Westlake on the Hilltop are proud of his record, and greet him with all the good wishes for the future.

The Hilltop Aldermyth Club

At the last regular meeting of the Hilltop Aldermyth Club, held in the upstairs room of the blacksmith shop down on the corner; the annual lecktshun of offisers tuck place. Cam Chase, the oldest and most respectin sitterin of the Hilltop was lected President. And in exceptin the offis he sed he'd oftin red in the papers 'bout the offis bein thrust on the man but he never fur onct thot it wud be he; but he reckoned as how he'd do his best, perviden he cud have the co-operrashun of all the members of the club which is in good and regler standin; and he sed he'd see that no one but them as wus in good and regler standin cud cum inter the club rooms.

Then, Glen Wood aris, and addreain the most honerd and respectin President, he sed, I make a move that the treasury examine the books and find out who's in good and regler standin' this move wus seckinded by Skid Moore, and the new President tuck the chair and put the move. When he cald fur remarks there was a dozen up fur tu speek and Ezra Prospect got the floor, he sed, "feller sitterzins and members of this here club, I've been a member in good and regler standin now of this club fur nere fore year, and I never knowed enny rules nor bilaw that kin keep a member frum talkin and votin; then Glen and Skid both tried tur get the floor, but the President sed, men and sitizins "I am the persiden offiser of this here club and I think I orter have the say; here is a member of this here club that is present in his person, an bein that he never sais nuthin, I lowed as now he'd want ter say a few words on this here subject. I most respectferly refur to our most honered and esteamed feller member, Brother Bob O. Link."

Then Brother Bob O. Link, he that was the dun hoss with the white main and is blind in the left eye; it lost its eye when it wus a colt, and never found it again. Bob is the man that married Deacon Syler's oldest dotter Matilda Ann; Deacon Syler wus the fust man to own his own Ford in the hull kentry. Bro. Bob sed, he never sed nuthin fur he reckoned that no one keer'ed to hear what he had to say; but he sed his mother allers sed he'd make a great man, but he never dreamed of bein a member of the offishall body of the Hilltop.

Then Bro. Ezra rospect ris to a pint of order, he sed the subject wus one that orter be discussed in .. more serus manner, as a member of this offishall and governin body of the Grand and Glorious Hilltop, "I say we orter be lookin out over the battlements of the last and plannin fur a Great and Glorious future."

At this pint, Hexsie Young, the newly lected fernanshal seckertary ris and sed he'd have to have another weak's time to figger out who's in good and regler standin.

Then the President riz and sollemly cald on Deacon Syler to rede the cloain ode, and he sed he'd ajurn the meetin fur a weak.

BUILDING RECORD ON THE HILLTOP DURING 1922

The Greatest It Has Ever Been—Rating Second of All Sections of the City

The report of Secretary German of City Inspector's office shows past 12 months to be the biggest in the history of the city building commission in the number of permits issued for new dwellings.

Permits issued at the office amounted to 5,767, with a valuation of $18,190,560, showing an increase over the number of permits in 1921 of more than 1,000, with an increase in valuation of over the previous year of almost $9,000,000.

The north end of the city showed itself to be the most popular among builders, with the Nineteenth ward leading all other wards with a total of 790. The Eleventh ward, on the Hilltop, extending west of Whitethorne Ave. to the western limits, is second with 594 permits, while the Hilltop east of Whitethorne Ave., and in the Tenth ward, adds another 110, making a total for the entire Hilltop section of 704.

Among some of the larger buildings included in the above number is the new John Burroughs school on Sullivant Ave., which is one of the most modern and finest buildings in the city; the St. John's Lutheran Church on Broad St., near Hague Ave., a fine pressed brick structure; the Burketts block, near Terrace St.; Henderson block, near Highland Ave.; the new Hilltop Building & Loan Co. building, on South Park Ave.; the Voss Bros. building on Broad St. near Terrace Ave., opened last Saturday as one of the finest Ford sales and service stations in the city; while scores of others have added largely to the beauty and value of the Hilltop as the coming business and residential section of the city.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Hilltop Church of Christ entertained with a New Year's party at the home of the pastor, Rev. J. N. Johnston, Monday evening, January 1. The evening was spent in playing games and guessing New Year's resolutions. Thirty members and their friends were present.

The Philathea Class of Glenwood M. E. Church will give a chicken dinner Thursday evening, January 11th, at the Church, 5:30 to 7:30. 35 cents the plate.

Rev. W. E. MacFarlane, pastor of the Hill Crest Baptist Church, was called to Lansing, Mich., Thursday to officiate at the funeral of a former parishioner. He will return home to occupy the pulpit on Sunday.

The regular monthly meeting of the J. R. B. Sunday School Class of Glenwood M. E. Church will be held Tuesday evening, January 9th, at the home of Mrs. Dial, 474 Whitethorne Ave. The assisting hostesses are Mrs. Bower, Mrs. Bender, Mrs. Carrol and Mrs. Connor.

If you need any repairs on household furnishings, call Hilltop 4268. All work second to none in the city.

Creamed chicken, hot biscuit, and apple pie a la mode are just some of the good things to eat at the Glenwood Church, Thursday, January 11th. 35 cents the plate.

Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Russell, 168 N. Warren Ave., entertained on Friday evening to a family dinner honoring the birthday anniversary of their son James.

Mr. H. O. Schoonover, 163 N. Warren Ave., and daughter Marie spent the holidays with relatives at Findlay, Ohio.

Don't forget the chicken dinner at Glenwood M. E. Church, Thursday evening, January 11th, 5:30 to 7:30. 35 cents the plate.

Hilltop Deaths

Complications caused the death of Merch Ealer Swanson last Friday at Ashville, N. C., where for the past two years he has been residing in an effort to regain his health.

Mr. Swanson retired from the Climax Rubber Company, where he held the position of Secretary and Treasurer, prior to going south.

He has been a resident of the Hilltop for many years and was interested in all of her interests and enterprises. For two terms he was a member of the Board of Education. He was a member of Goodale Lodge of Masons, Junia Lodge of Odd Fellows, the Republican Glee Club, and the Glenwood M. E. Church.

He leaves a widow, Mrs. Ella May Swanson; two sons, Melville E. and Leslie M.; one daughter, Mrs. W. P. Casto, of Kenton, and three grandchildren. The funeral services were held at the Glenwood M. E. Church Tuesday morning, in charge of the Masons. Appropriate remarks were made by his pastor, Rev. R. T. Stimmel, and by his former pastor, Rev. P. E. White. The Masons had general charge of the services, and the music was furnished by the Republican Glee Club. Burial in Green Lawn

Funeral services for Charles A. Bentz, 26, member of the Bentz Brothers' Construction Co. of Columbus, who died Sunday in a Pittsburgh hospital following injuries suffered when the truck he was driving turned over, pinning him beneath it, were held Tuesday in St. Aloysius Church. Burial in St. Joseph's Cemetery. He is survived by his mother, Mrs. Agnes Bentz of 2006 Sullivant Ave.; two sisters, Misses Agnes and Mary Bentz, and four brothers, William, John, George and Frank Bents, all of Columbus.

The sympathy of all the Hilltop folk is extended to Mr. and Mrs. Earl Campbell, of 7 S. Park Ave., at the death of their three months' old daughter, Hazel Earline, last Friday. Left alone in an upstairs room to take milk from a nursing bottle, the child was found dead a short time later. The cause of death by strangulation while nursing was determined by Coroner Murphy. Funeral was held Saturday at the residence. Burial in Green Lawn, by C. J. Kohn.

Mrs. Cora Irene Henzel, 24, died of complications Sunday evening at the home of her mother, Mrs. L. D. Pletcher; two brothers, David and Lester, and a sister, Mrs. Bertha Finley. Funeral 10 a. m. Wednesday at the residence. Burial in Union Cemetery.

Floyd Albin Ogdin, 5 months, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Ogdin, 2027 Floral Ave., was found dead in bed Sunday morning. Funeral services were held Monday at 3 p. m. at the residence. Burial in Green Lawn by C. J. Kohn.

The Little Story That's True

Jim was just a common boy, not unlike the other boys, except that he was burdened with a much larger share of avoirdupois than the rest of the bunch he traveled wite. Jim's dad had forbidden him going in swiming, whether because he was afraid he'd get over his depths, or was that his presence in the creek might cause the water to overflow it's banks and flood the natives out, we cannot say. Anyway, when the "bunch" passed by Jim's house and held up two fingers to Jim, the temptation was too great, and Jim joined the gang, which, in not much longer time than it takes to tell it, had reached the swimming hole and all plunged in. In due time the sport was over, and climbing into their clothes, they hiked for home, but Jim in the meantime had accidently gotten his shirt on wrong-side out, which was quickly noticed by his dad, who after asking him if he had been in swimming, was given negative answer. He than asked him how he got his shirt on wrong-side out. Jim innocently replied, "Climbing over the fence." Jim then "got his."

WIRE CAGE FOR $5,000 TREE

New Jersey Farmer Sold Freak Branch Which Bore New Variety of Fruit.

BOUGHT BY NURSERY FIRM

Owner Was Paid $1,000 and Will Get Two Cents for Each Bud That Is Developed—Will Be Subjected to Exhaustive Tests.

Ferrell, N. J.—A wire cage has been constructed around the "$5,000 apple tree" in the orchard of Lewis Mood, a farmer living at Ferrell, in South Harrison township, Gloucester county. Mood recently sold a branch from this particular tree, producing an entirely new variety of apple, to one of the big nursery firms of the country for what is said to be a record-breaking price for this fruit.

The public will have to wait two years or more before it can learn very much about the Mood apple, as it is being guarded with the greatest secrecy, indicated by the erection of the stout wire cage entirely around the tree. All that is known so far is that it is a red apple of exceptional size and sweetness. There is no other apple just like it in this country, so far as horticultural experts have been able to determine.

To Be Tested.

This new variety will be subjected to the most exhaustive tests under various climatic and soil conditions throughout the United States, before the nursery firm which has bought it is willing to place it upon the market. Orchard science as applied through top budding will make it possible to produce the new fruit in quantities large enough for experimental purposes within a year or two.

The new apple is purely an accident of nature, being a freak from one of the ordinary orchard varieteis. Mood noticed several years ago that one of the branches of a particular tree in his orchard was bearing an apple that was different, both in color and flavor from the fruit from other limbs on the same tree. He watched this apple carefully for season after season. He took off some buds and started other trees. The big red Mood apples were in such demand among his customers that last season he sold $75 worth of apples from the original tree alone.

Nursery Men Interested.

A representative of a nursery company learned that the Jersey farmer had an apple that was attracting attention and he called to see Mood. "I had thought of trying to put out this new apple myself," said Mood in talking of his "find." "I put a price on the apple that I thought would keep those fellows from pestering me about selling. They got the head of the company here to look over the apple and to see the tree and we came to terms."

Just what these terms are are set forth in a bill of sale and a surveyor's record of the exact location of the tree, which have been filed in the Gloucester county clerk's office at Woodbury. Even the particular branch of the tree is designated in this unusual record.

According to the agreement on file which is corroborated by Mood in personal conversation, he has received $1,000 in cash and is to get $4,000 in "royalties" at the rate of two cents for each bud that is taken from the original branch or any trees developed from it. These buds will be grafted upon stock to produce trees of the new variety.

"Five thousand dollars seems like a big price for an apple," remarked one well informed nurseryman regarding Mood's sale, "but in these days a new apple of exceptional quality, color and size is worth a small fortune to any one who has the courage and organization to introduce it to the nation."

Many Children in Sixteen Years.

Poplar Bluff, Mo.—Mr. and Mrs. Charles Winder, who live just south of Poplar Bluff, were married 16 years ago. The other day their fourteenth child was born. The children all arrivedly singly, and seven of the fourteen are living.

Black Bass Goes Hunting and Catches a Blackbird

Lake Wales, Fla.—Black bass in the vicinity of Lake Wales have become exceedingly voracious, says Milton Henry, farmer, living near here. Henry advises all women with feathers on their hats to keep away from a large lake that constitutes a part of his farm. He declares this story to be true:

While plowing out sweet potatoes a few days ago her heard the cries of a bird and considerable splashing in the water near shore. His quick attention revealed that a black bass had leaped from the water and grabbed a blackbird sitting on a reed bent just over the lake's surface. The bird had been dragged into the water and was struck at by the fish several times before Henry waded to its rescue. The bird later died and the farmer exhibited it to his friends to substantiate the story.

STAR RZ CEPHEI FASTEST OF ALL

Harvard Observatory Declares That 2,500,000 Miles Per Hour Is Its Pace.

LONG KNOWN TO ASTRONOMERS

Speed of the Star Was Measured at Harvard Observatory by Complicated Process of Observations and Computations.

Cambridge, Mass.—Nearly 2,500,000 miles per hour, or 1,100 kilometers per second, is the speed record set by the star RZ Cephei, which, according to a bulletin issued by the Harvard college observatory, has been found by Harvard astronomers to be moving through space with a greater velocity than that of any other star whose speed has yet been determined.

This star, a variable star of the so-called cluster type, has long been known to astronomers, but its velocity was never measured until recently. It is far too faint to be seen with the naked eye, is being of the tenth magnitude. It is in the constellation Cepheus, and is 8,800 light years distant from the earth, which means that the light from it which astronomers now see through their telescopes started on its journey to the earth in the time of the shepherd kings of Egypt, nearly 1,900 years before Christ.

Velocity Is Greatest.

That distance is only a small fraction of the distance from the earth to some of the more distant star clusters, but the outstanding fact about RZ Cephei is that its velocity as it flies through space is the greatest yet known for a star.

The speed of the star was measured at the Harvard observatory by a complicated process of observations and computations, including among other things the comparison of photographs recently taken at Harvard with others taken 31 years ago, when the observatory was just beginning its task of preserving a photographic history of the entire sky. Since that time a "sky patrol" has been kept without interruption at Cambridge, supplemented by photographs taken at the station at Arequipa, Peru, and the history of the stars down to the eleventh magnitude has been written by the stars themselves on over 250,000 photographic plates weighing 140 tons.

Study Sky Photographs.

Most of the discoveries made by Harvard astronomers, it is said at Cambridge, are not made by looking through a telescope at night, as is popularly supposed, but by doing what was done in the case of this discovery of the speed of RZ Cephei, by studying and measuring by day, in the laboratory, photographs taken at night, and by comparing the significance of the changes in the brilliance or position or spectra of the stars as recorded on these plates.

The discovery of the immense speed of RZ Cephei is said to be important to astronomers as suggesting that this type of variable star escapes from the globular clusters, a hypothesis suggested also by other recent observations.

Lord Leverhulme, who was recently elevated to an earldom, is another example of a member of Britain's nobility rising from humble circumstances. He made his enormous fortune in the production of soap, working his way up from the "bottom of the ladder." He has established community houses and homes for workmen in his manufacturing cities which rent for $3 a month, the workmen also participating in the prosperity of his enterprises by profit sharing schemes and industrial copartnerships.

SPECIAL NEW YEAR'S SERIES

At Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church the pastor, Rev. Richard E. Shields, will begin a series of sermons the first Sunday in January on the general subject, "Living Men, Great and Good." The Sunday School orchestra will play and it is hoped that a children's chorus will sing in addition to other special music by Miss Jeannette Trone and others of the congregation. The dates and subjects follow:

January 7, "Three American Inventors;" January 14, "Three American Poets;" January 21, "Three American Novelists;" January 28, (morning) "Three British Statesmen," (evening) "The Oberamergau Passion Play 1922," illustrated with beautiful hand colored slides of this year's performance; February 4, "Three Great Preachers;" February 11 (morning), "Three American Statesmen;" (evening) Illustrated lecture of interest to all; February 21, an extra sermon dealing with "Well's Six Greatest Men of History."

Can you guess who the three inventors will be? or the three British Statesmen? or the three living Poets? These sermons will be not only full of information but will deal with the character vital elements which make these men great and good.

In some cases very personal factors will be brought out and this alone will make them interesting to all. You are invited to come and enjoy these Sabbath evenings together, (only two sermons in the morning as indicated) and also to invite your friends.

We welcome you to all our services.

RICHARD E. SHIELDS, Pastor.

You'll do better at Seiller's after all.

Digest of Reports From Middle Western States Shows Methods Being Employed to Check Evil—Fines $2 Per Mile.

What do you think ought to be done to stop the slaughter by auto speeders?

Chicago.—Heavier fines, jail sentences and trips through morgues and hospitals to view the dead and injured victims of reckless automobilists are becoming effective in many parts of the Middle West to curb the steadily mounting toll of auto victims, a digest from the report of several states shows.

Fines alone, the reports indicate, are not proving effective. In Chicago and Cook county, despite increasingly heavy fines, the death toll in automobile accidents for the fiscal year ending November 30 was 736 lives, as compared with 660 last year and 542 the year before. There were 75 automobile deaths in November of this year.

In Louisville, where 41 persons were killed by automobiles in the first eleven months of the year, fines have also failed, officials say. One police judge there imposes fines of $2 for each mile per hour on speeders, and adds jail sentences if the prisoner was intoxicated.

A successful campaign was launched at Detroit more than a year ago, when Judge Charles L. Bartlett began sending speeders to jail for terms of one to fifteen days. Among those sentenced was John Duval Dodge, wealthy young man, who served five days.

Recently speeding returned to Detroit and Judge Bartlett began conducting offenders through the morgues and hospitals to see the results of speeding. Arrests the week after the trips started dropped from 76 to 38.

Revokes Driver's License.

In Cincinnati jail sentences have been invoked and in some cases driver's licenses revoked.

Cleveland, with 116 deaths and 2,936 injuries in traffic accidents up to the middle of November, is employing workhouse sentences and morgue and hospital visits, as well as fines. Six speeders were sentenced to attend the funeral of a four-year-old victim of a speeder.

City Law Director Lambros proposes the speed of automobiles passing schools, playgrounds and churches be limited to ten miles an hour; that judges be authorized to revoke speeders' licenses; a uniform signal system for autoists stopping, turning or backing and that no one under eighteen years of age be permitting to drive in cities or under sixteen years of age on any road.

In Des Moines Police Chief John Hammond has ordered intoxicated drivers held without bail, while judges are adding jail sentences in many cases to heavy fines.

Judge George H. Mix of St. Louis, who assesses fines as high as $500, has added a traffic law school to his court. Speeders who admit they know the traffic ordinances draw heavy fines. Those who do not are required to sit down between two policemen and study it. When they can recite the entire law to the judge they get a lighter fine.

In Indiana, the secretary of state has revoked autoist's licenses on recommendations of courts, and has promised to continue his co-operation. Judge Delbert Wilmeth of the Indianapolis court has added jail sentences to fines of third convictions.

Impose $36 Fines.

Kansas City has had occasional heavy fines on jail sentences, but no continued campaign against speeders. Police take license numbers of traffic law violators and on the third violation a fine of $36 is imposed.

Judge W. F. Wappick of Omaha takes groups of speeders to hospitals in the police patrol to see their victims and then assesses fines.

Judge Sylvester J. McAtee of San Francisco recently sentenced a speeder to sixty days in jail, and announced he would continue a drastic campaign against traffic law violators.

Oklahoma officials at Oklahoma City, Tulsa and Muskogee are warring on speeders. Twenty-two persons have been killed in Muskogee county and eleven in Oklahoma City this year.

The worst offenders in Dallas are light commercial trucks, according to Judge P. D. Crawford. He assesses fines up to $200.

An Old Mortgage.

Philadelphia.—A mortgage for $650 recorded November 8, 1845—77 years ago—against the Haagen farm in Beech Creek township, Clinton county, has just been satisfied at the office of Register and Recorder P. S. Kitt, Lock Haven. The original holder of the mortgage was William G. Jackson, who later became a resident of Nottingham, Va. The amount due was paid within a year after the mortgage was given, but the transaction had never been cleared up on the books.

NO LONGER FEAR SNOW

Railroad Tie-ups Prevented by Modern Equipment.

Periods of Weeks of Stalled Trains in Late 80's Reduced to Matter of Hours by Plangers and Snow Plows.

St. Paul.—The day of blocked railroad lines in winter due to huge snow drifts is gone. Where periods of weeks of stalled trains in the Northwest were experienced in the late '80s and early in the present century, snow plows have reduced the stoppage to a matter of hours, northwest railroad officials say.

Flangers and snow plows—wedge and rotary—are the most common equipment used to keep the rails clear on all the various systems, although in the deep cuts and mountain territory in the Dakotas and Montana, snow gangs of half a dozen men or more are necessary to fight the frigid precipitation.

The Northern Pacific railway equips all locomotives with flangers, attached near the wheels, which force the snow from the rails to the wayside, the road superintendent states. At all terminals, wedge plows are stationed, awaiting calls from any section. In the mountain districts, the rotary plow is used, which burrows through the snow, whirling it from the tracks.

Similar methods are used by the Minneapolis and St. Louis, the Great Northern and the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie systems. The former road has most of its trouble in its 360 miles of railroad in South Dakota, says W. H. Bremner, president of the Minneapolis and St. Louis, but wedge plows are the fighting factors.

Snow gangs are employed in many cases by the Great Northern in deep cuts, where the wind piles up drifts too high for the plows to penetrate. This road does not wait for calls to arrive, but keeps all plows busy during a snowstorm.

Railroad men declare that the delay occasioned by snowstorms on main lines has become negligible, except in severe weather and terrific storms, but admit more work is necessary on the branch lines because of the inaccessibility of the plows. Some railroad officials are inclined to believe that the winters in the Northwest have been milder of recent years, while others declared the use of modern equipment has made it seem the weather had less effect on the railroads.

FIRST AMERICAN WOMAN MATE

Mrs. Wanda Heibig, daughter of a Polish nobleman, who is now a stewardess on the Korea Maru, is the first woman to receive a mate's license on an American ship in which she has been the navigating officer through typhoons in the Philippine waters. Mrs. Heibig recently arrived in San Francisco where she resides when in port. In her boat, called the Eclypse, she has personally steered through the most terrific storms in Manila bay. Mrs. Heibig was the discoverer of the monkey-tailed men in far Palawan. She was kidnaped by a Moro weoer and rescued from a mosque by her husband during her wanderings about the world. She speaks seven languages and has visited every country on the globe. She is a native of Austria.

REUNITED AFTER 34 YEARS

Three Brothers and Sister Meet at South Bend as Result of Police Clew.

South Bend, Ind.—Three brothers and a sister, separated for 34 years, were reunited here recently when the quartette met at the home of Policeman Theodore Wolter. The principals were, in childhood, parceled out from an orphanage and lost track of one another. The reunion resulted from the arrest by Policeman Wolter of an arson suspect, who mentioned the name of one of the brothers of Mrs. Wolter. From this clew the relatives were brought together.

The brothers are Fred Stockman, thirty-five years old, Fort Wayne, Ind.; Elmer Stockman, thirty-eight, and Harry Stockman, forty, Rolling Prairie, Ind. The kinsfolk will hereafter hold annual reunions.

ARID AREAS RECLAIMED

Government Bureau Adds 1,675,000 Acres in 20 Years.

Annual Report Gives Result of Twenty Years of Operation of Reclamation Act—Government Investment $135,000,000.

Washington.—A 20-year review of government reclamation work is contained in the annual report for the fiscal year ended last June of Director Arthur P. Davis of the United States reclamation service of the Department of the Interior, as the 17th day of June, 1922, marked the completion of 20 years of operation of the national reclamation act.

The investment of the government during this period has been in round numbers $135,000,000, which has accomplished the construction of works by which about 1,675,000 acres of former arid land in the West has been furnished with a complete water supply and about 1,100,000 additional acres in private projects has received a supplemental supply. On government projects the area comprises 31,462 farms, at an average area per farm of about fifty-three acres, supplying more than 30,000 families.

With the investment mentioned the service has excavated more than 200,000,000 cubic yards of earth and rock of which about 14,000,000 cubic yards have been placed in dams. Canals aggregating more than 13,000 miles have been built, including 27 miles of tunnels and 135 miles of flumes. Structures of all kinds and sizes, to the number of 110,000, have been erected in connection with the work.

Some of the large projects constructed are the Roosevelt dam in Arizona, which is 200 feet high; the Arrowrock dam in Idaho, 349 feet high; Elephant Butte dam in New Mexico, 306 feet high, and the Pathfinder and Shoshone dam in Wyoming, 218 and 328 feet high, respectively.

Reclamation work also included the erection of many other dams, canals and tunnels, flumes, drains, power plants, transmission and telephone lines, roads, railroads, pumping plants and a variety of other classes of incidental work.

From an agricultural standpoint, the report said, the reclamation service has added another state to the Union, equal in value of its agricultural products to that of the state of West Virginia or the combined values of the crops of Vermont and Connecticut. The value of crops raised on farms on government projects in 1921 amounted to $49,620,800, exclusive of about $45,000,000 additional raised on private projects which were furnished water from works erected by the service.

Saved Choking Child.

Marion, O.—A piece of turnip, lodged in the throat, choked Albert Allen, a child in Marion county children's home. He was brought to Marion's new hospital, but the necessary instruments to remove the obstacle were not in the equipment. The child was taken 18 miles to a Delaware hospital, where an operation removed the throat obstruction.

Chases Deer With Hammer.

Goshen, N. J.—Many stories are told by deer hunters in Sullivan county. Leo Nester, residing south of Monticello, tells one. He said he saw a buck racing across his dooryard. He seized a hammer and gave chase, running neck and neck with the animal for some distance, when it got away.

Gets Rough With Deer's Ribs in Half-Mile Race

Monticello, N. Y.—Tales of hunters who have had remarkable adventures in the wilds of Sullivan county are drifting in.

There is the story of Leo Nester. Leo runs a boarding house south of here and does not get much time to hunt deer. When he saw one loping across his front lawn he was pretty sore, because he'd just seeded the lawn. He got a hammer and chased the deer for half a mile, running neck and neck with it the first quarter and thumping its ribs so lustily that Lem Turner, who was following them in a buggy, thought there was a bass drummer ahead of him.

New York.—The federal officers were on the trail of the society bootleggers and other wealthy violaters of the Volstead Act when they attempted to jollify according to the "old time" fashion, on New Year's eve. The expensive private stock of the millionaires and of some of the exclusive clubs received a severe jolt.

Coldwater, O.—Mr. Fred Bohman brought home "the bacon" the other day from a shooting match he attended; his supply of winter's meat consisted of a quarter of beef, a quarter of pork, and enough chickens to stock a small farm. And the prizes did not cost him the price of a common "pork chop."

Ashtabula.—The first baby born in this city in 1923 will have the following things added to its list of troubles: a gold chain and locket, savings account of $5, camera, hot water bottle, box of toilet necessities, and a baby cab. With all the rest of the regular list, such as colic, croup, measles, rash, mumps, chicken-pox, whooping cough and rickets.

Marysville.—The ladies of the "Select Sewing Circle" at the Ohio Reformatory for Women initiated a new member into their circle the other day; the new member came from Cincinnati and was known at home as Miss Keegan; she will assist Mrs. Kaber from Cleveland and Mrs. Kraus from Pomeroy, the other select ladies in the making of the new robes for the other inmates. They have decided to remain at the institution the remainder of their lives.

Lima.—The citizens of the city are shivering at the approach of the severe winter weather; in the face of the city losing its fight against the increase of the price of natural gas; they will have to pay the increased rate of $1 a thousand; instead of the present rate of 55c a thousand. This is a New Year present from the Public Utilities Commission.

London, O.—Next Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock Mrs. Edith Thompson and Frederick Edward Bywaters, who were found guilty of the murder of Mrs. Thompson's husband, will be hanged. An appeal for clemency, containing more than a million signatures, and which was so large it required two motor trucks to carry it to the home office, will not be considered by the Home Secretary. Mrs. Thompson will be the first British woman to be hanged in 13 years.

"Good Old Columbus Town"

Bank clearings in this good old town during 1922 exceeded those of 1921 by $70,000,000 and established the second highest total ever reached here. Which indicates the stability of our manufacturing and commercial industries. This substantial increase also reflects the steady improvement of business conditions.

Another evidence of the rapid recovery from the business depression is reflected in the increase in the number of deeds and other similar transactions as they were recorded during the past year by County Recorder Williams. A total of 85,970 instruments were recorded during the year as compared to 63,136 for 1921.

Columbus is known throughout the world as "the Convention City" and in the past year she has made the biggest record in her history. 240 conventions were held in this city during the year; 40 more than in 1921, bringing approximately 150,000 strangers to the city, who are estimated to have spent $4,500,000 while here. And this has been brought about by the activities of the Columbus Convention, Exposition and Community Service Association.

The conduct of our citizens has not been up to the past, as the records show an increase in the number of cases in the Municipal Court; the total number of cases on the docket during the year was 8,880, or 1,711 more than in 1921. This little "cut up" on the part of the offenders cost them the sum of $146,254.68 in fines.

The West Side Lumber Company

The West Side Lumber Company, located at West Broad Street and the Big Four R. R., is one of the fast growing business concerns of the Hilltop. Established in 1910, starting with a small plant and a force of six men, it has grown to be one of the largest plants of its kind in the city; with a present force of thirty men in the several departments. The increase of the business has been so rapid and permanent that new buildings have become an absolute necessity, among the new buildings and improvements just now being completed are a new eight-door garage, brick construction; new mill, 60x100, two story, also brick construction, and electrically equipped; with a complete vacuum system which reduces the possibility of fire to the minimum, the new office building also two story and of brick construction, modern, steam heated, electrically equipped, which will enable them to give each customer the greatest possible attention and facilitate the handling of the orders with the least delay.

Trackage in the lumber department also in the coal yards, each with a capacity of twenty cars. Modern electrical equipped apparatus for the handling of the coal, so that teams are not delayed more than from three to five minutes in loading.

The new department of Buildings Supplies is in charge of Mr. Hayden Jones, is one of the latest additions to their business. Mr. R. A. Percy is the efficient manager; and is very ably assisted by a competent office force in the persons of H. O. Deems, D. O. Jenkins, A. W. Jordan, and Hayden Jones. Mr. Charles Eicher is foreman of the mill and yards. It is a pleasure for the Hilltop Record to present these gentlemen and this valuable line of business to its readers. HELP US MAKE THE HILLTOP HUM.

Pelican Pecks

Speakin of dumb-bells how about those foolish questions and silly answers one often hears. It reminds us of that story told in the American Legion Weekly: "You poor man!" gushed a woman, patronisingly, to a veteran who had received four medals for bravery in action. "Did you lose your arm in battle?" He smiled, modestly, "No, ma'am," he replied, "I was do robber for the Cap'n when we were up in the Argonne. He asked me to clean out his canary's cage and the darned bird bit me."—Note well—think three times before you ask a question!!

Printers have a habit of doing the right thing at the wrong time—did you notice Mrs. Dulgar's ad last week at the bottom of Pelican Pecks—and to think that we had just warned the printer against being a dumb-bell.

Personality note. Westlake won in tions. Milt!

We haven't forgotten the Skip-stop. On cold days when time is a necessity wouldn't it be fine to get down town in fifteen minutes!

Have you met Doty of the Hilltop Record family He'll glad-hand you right. Keep the news coming. It is his business to write it up and get you into print. (He isn't the Pelican either).

Say who is that Pelican guy anyhow

Never mind, he is just one of the bunch.

Next week he will A B C the whole Record family. Don't miss it.

David Deshler, seven-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Deshler, 127 South Ogden Avenue, who was run over by an automobile while crossing West Broad Street, at Eureka Avenue, is still in a very serious condition at Mt. Carmel Hospital; the wheels of the machine passed over the lad's body inflicting internal injuries, from which it is very difficult for the little fellow to recover.

Social Items

The Eldon Avenue Club, composed of sixteen families on that avenue, held one of the most delightful gatherings last Monday evening, in the form of a birthday surprise party on Mrs. C. F. Prior, 101 North Eldon Avenue. They met at the home of Mr. Herbert Gibson, and went in true old fashioned surprise party way. They carried with them all the requisites for an enjoyable time. After the shock of the surprise, and the congratulations were over, a program was introduced, which was also a surprise; the first edition of "The Eldon Avenue Star" was issued, much to the delight of those who did not receive any special mention. The Club presented Mrs. Prior with a reading lamp, the presentation speech being made by the Rev. J. N. Johnson, after which Mrs. Anna Mott, presented the birthday cake, on which were 16 candles representing the age of the recipient; to which Mrs. Prior modestly responded, not at all embarrassed that they had discovered her age. The following members of the club were present: Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Seiller, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Seiller, Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Linville, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Walton, Mrs. Arsbaugh and daughter, Mrs. Anna Mott and daughter Winifred, Mr. and Mrs. Royal Milliken, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Six, Rev. and Mrs. J. N. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Postle, Mrs. C. W. Roush and daughter, Urania, Mr. and Mrs. Apple, Miss Areminta Smith, Mrs. Frank Smiley, sister of Mrs. Prior, and Mrs. M. H. Prior.

The First Division of the Glenwood Ladies' Aid entertained their husbands Thursday evening, January 4th, at the Church. The basement was converted into a very cosy and comfortable living room; fish, bird or beast was first played which brought many laughs; we hate to admit it but the men won the honors in the clothespin race, also the travel contest, nor were they slow in the race for the delicious and substantial refreshments served by the following hostesses. Mrs. Ferguson, Albert, Ireland, Gatton, Johnson, Matheney, Moore, Michell, and Randolph.

A very pleasant house party was held last Saturday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Dooley, 149 South Wheatland Avenue. A most delightful time was enjoyed in the various amusements; the evening's festivities were crowned with the serving of a very appetizing and tempting lunch. The following guests were present; Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Byerly, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Helembrecht, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Lytle, Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Smothers, and family. Mr. Clayton Young, Winchester, Va., Mrs. E. R. Rhodes, Mrs. Farrington, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Doty, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Dooley, of Newark, Ohio, and the host and hostess.

A most delightful birthday party was celebrated at the home of Master Charles Lawrence Gardner, 262 Whitethorne Avenue, last Friday afternoon. It being his 9th birthday. A most enjoyable afternoon was spent by the following guests, Inez Buscher, Alice Gregg, Charlotte Stevens, Ruth Neff, Virginia Randall, Janet Hoskins, Juanita Friend, Helen Moorman, Bobby Miles, Maz Allard, Roy Krause, Sheldon Millett, Dick Wallace, Paul Harrison, Russell Wise, Woodrow Owen, Martin Sharp, Alvin Wallace, Mrs. R. S. Wallace, Mrs. Belle Gardner, Mrs. J. Neff, Miss Lizzie Wallace, Mrs. Gardner, and the hostess. Games and refreshments were some of the entertainment furnished by the hostess for the occasion.

Hilltop Deaths

Mrs. Bird Lenore Cady, 53, wife of Chas. A. Cady, 195 Highland Avenue, died from complications. She is survived by her mother, Mrs. William Bollwine, of Des Moines; two sons, Ernest and William, and a sister Mrs. A. H. Elwell of Marblehead. Funeral services were held Wednesday at the Hillcrest Baptist Church. Burial at Newark, Ohio.

Mrs. Alice Julia Roof, wife of Henry Roof, formerly of Corning, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Carrie Shirkey, 88 Whitethorne Avenue. Funeral was held at the residence Tuesday. Burial at Green Lawn.

Edwin Austin Kelso, nine months old son of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Kelso, 260 South Park Avenue, died at 6 p. m. Saturday, of pneumonia. Funeral Monday at 1:30, burial at Union Cemetery. Beside the parents he is survived by one sister, Florence, and one brother, William.

Miss Lillian Familton, mother of H. F. Familton, 100 North Warren Avenue, passed away at Protestant hospital on Tuesday morning.

ARE YOU MARKETING TOMORROW?

Why not accompany me to the Hilltop Fruit and Vegetable Market. Its the most delightful place in the city in which to do your marketing; nowhere on the Hilltop is there a place where such high grade fruits and fresh vegetables are sold. And their service, well, "Service" is their middle name; they know just what we Hilltoppers need.

One can obtain anything in the fruit and vegetables line any time during the day. There are just two things which they offer that distinguishes them from other dealers, and those two are, QUALITY AND SERVICE.

HILLTOP CITIZENS DOING PUBLIC SERVICE

What They Have Accomplished, or Helped to Do So in City and County Affairs

Mr. Milton W. Westlake, 2499 West Broad Street, who has just retired from the City Council, where he has served for the past nine years; has made an enviable reputation by his splendid record as a public servant; which was shown by his majority the last time he was elected, he receiving the largest majority ever given a member of council.

The first of the year he was sworn in as the new member of the board of county commissioners, taking the place of Mr. Scott, retiring.

The following are some of the many things which Mr. Westlake was able to accomplish while he served in council; many times having to fight for weeks before he was able to have his ordinances adopted.

The river improvement and flood protection, the new civic center, the new City Hall project, combining the work house and city prison, thereby saving the work house from destruction, placing telephone wires underground, regulation of fake shows in vacant store rooms, municipal circus ground, improved playgrounds and equipment, Town Street bridge, Glenwood park tourists camp, West Broad Street and many other street improvements, shorter hours and reasonable pay for firemen and policemen, O'Shaughnessy water works dam, restoring Broad Street car traffic cut off by bridge construction, Alum Creek footbridge for school children and playground frequenters, comfort stations at State House grounds, closing saloons on Fourth of July, Memorial day and Christmas; Glenwood recreation building, Glenwood park; also a $15,000 bond issue for the purchase of additional land, and for the beautification of Glenwood park, which he hopes will be carried to completion by the present council in the year 1923, the purchase of land on North Eldon Avenue known as Hillcrest park, the purchase of land for a 20 acre park known as Linden park, the double tracking of West Broad Street from Highland Avenue west. It was his recommendation whereby the city can save over $1,000 a month in rent, by purchasing what is known as the Beswein building, located on the new City Hall site, and moving all of the city offices into this building, occupying it until the new City Hall is completed. Compelling public orators, in wartime to speak under the flag. Also many more which will be a lasting monument to his honesty and persistency to his duties as a public officer.

Fixing the charge of six tickets for a quarter or five cent cash fare on all bus lines.

Our only present representative from the West Side, in the city council, is our Hilltop citizen and business man, Wyatt L. Milliken who has served us three years. He has always been an advocate of all public improvements at the lowest possible cost to the tax-payer. He has worked for public parks and play grounds, and is now working on the financing of the improvement of the Broad Street frontage of Glenwood Park, by grading back the steep bank along the front entrance.

He was instrumental in securing for the Hilltop, the beautiful park and playground north of Broad Street, in the Heed and Holton addition. He was also instrumental in securing for the Hilltop, the grounds and buildings of the John Burroughs School now located on Sullivant Avenue; he has been instrumental in securing a large paving program for the entire city of Columbus.

The Ordinance which was passed to regulate taxi-cabs and motor busses was the result of his endeavors. He can always be relied upon for any good thing that is needed in the way of buildings or improvements for the public good and convenience of the citizens of Columbus.

He has always been back of the river improvements, locating City Hall on the river front, and a general beautifying of the river bank through the city. He introduced practically all the legislature for the new O'Shaughnessy dam, and the improvement of the filtration plant, and has worked not only in the city council but is allied with nearly every civic organization in the city of Columbus—The Columbus Chamber of Commerce, Director of the Family Service Society, Director the Gladden Community House, The Hilltop Chamber of Commerce and many others spending time and money for carrying out of the projects which he thinks is for the greatest good of the masses.

LISTEN, TO THE HILLTOP "HELLO"

The Ohio Bell Telephone Company has a large force of men at work improving the facilities of communication on the Hilltop. Principal among the improvements now being completed, are the placing of half a mile underground cable containing 300 wires; and three quarters of a mile of main underground cable containing 1800 wires; and almost a mile of aerial cable. The cost of which is in the neighborhood of $25,000.

We wish to express our sincere thanks to all our friends, relatives and neighbors for the kindness shown us at the burial of our husband and father, Merch E. Swanson. We especially thank Mrs. C. Walton, Prof. Moenic and the Republican Glee Glub for the music rendered, Rev. H. T. Stimmel, Rev. P. E White, Goodale Lodge F. & A. M. and Junie Lodge 474 I. O. O. F. for their services, also the efficient service of E. E. Fisher Co.

Mrs. Ella May Swanson and Family.

Mrs. L. W. Muncie of 109 N. Warren Avenue, who has been visiting her niece, Mrs. Jessie Kaiser of Orlando, Florida, for the last four weeks, returned home this morning on an early train. Mrs. Muncie reports the weather ideal at Orlando; picked strawberries on Christmas, and children going barefooted.

Just received a shipment of American Salted Peanuts, also almons, of Spain, and Love nuts from Turkey. Come in and look them over. You sure will like them. Mrs. Dulgar's Restaurant.

The pupils of Mr. Walter L. King will give a Piano Recital at the Glenwood Methodist Church, Friday evening January 12th at 8 o'clock. Those taking part in the program are, Frances Herron, Alice Nemire, Eloise Baxter, Frances Smith, Mildred Welsh, Gertrude Alfred, Helen Daniels, Wilma Swed, Louise Alfred, Myron Miller, Ruth Dell, Thelma Giel, Dorothy Hamerstein, Thelma Allen, Evelyn Leffel, Mary Elizabeth Canbon, Virginia Bostwick, Louise McMurray, Doris Stewart, Ruth Funke, Truth Daniels, Bernadine Drum.

Mr. N. H. Riggle, of 53 South Eureka Avenue, is not 53 years old as we made it appear in the account of his wedding anniversary last week. And we want all his friends to know that it was his 43rd wedding anniversary; but we are not at libery to divulge just the exact number of years he has been on earth. But hope that he will stick around for some moons yet.

The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Jenkins, 16 South Burgess Avenue, which was so seriously burned last week when it reached on the table and overturned a cup of hot coffee; is recovering very nicely without any serious results; although at first it was thought the sight of one eye had been destroyed.

The Home Guards will meet at the home of Merrill and Gwendeline Blair, 81 South Ogden Avenue, Friday at 8:30.

The many friends of Ray (Biddy) Bidwell, will be glad to see him at the new E. & B. Shoe Store at Eldon and Broad; just ask for Biddy.

The St. John's Lutheran Church added to their membership 15 new, adult members last Sunday; seven were confirmed and eight were admitted through letters from other congregations. On Monday evening this congregation held their annual meeting electing new officers and attending to some other official business; after which the Brotherhood served a light lunch. The choir of this church will render their Christmas cantata Sunday evening to which the public is very cordially invited.

Seiler's January Sale, now on.

The regular meeting of the Parent-Teacher Association of West Broad St. School will be held January 12th, Friday evening at eight o'clock.

J. G. Collicott, Superintendent of Schools will give the address of the evening.

Music will be furnished by pupils of the school and a piano solo by Miss Hazel Keenan. It is desired that all parents having children in the school and all those interested in the welfare of the community be present to hear Mr. Collicott.

Mrs. J. G. Closs, Secretary.

In spite of rain last Sunday night a large audience greeted the presentation of the first sermon of a series at Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church by the pastor, Rev. R. F. Shields. A boys' chorus sang very well indeed led by Mr. H. O. Deems and Mr. E. Earl led the Sunday School orchestra.

Mr. Shields took as his subject: "Three American Inventors" among whom were given Henry Ford, Thomas A. Edison and Charles P. Steinmets. The brief life history of each one was given and the speaker told many interesting stories of their work. Mr. Ford was remarkable for his rise from a boy who had little to a man worth millions, and his work cited as a proof of the value of faith. Mr. Edison is credited with over 1500 separate inventions, such as the telephone (that is the improvement on it), electric light, phonograph, motion pictures, etc., etc., and the story was thrilling. Of Mr. Steinmets the speaker was able to give only a short account.

Next Sunday night Mr. Shields said he would speak about "Three Living Poets," all of them Americans, and I believe you'll have to go early to get a seat.

Church Doings

HOGE MEMORIAL PRESBYTERIAN

10:30 A. M.—Morning Worship and sermon: "A Restatement of Prayer." Miss Trone will sing.

7:30 P. M.—Second sermon in the series, "Living Men, Great and Good," on the specific subject: "Three American Poets." Music by the Sunday School Orchestra, the Boys' Chorus and Miss Jeannette Trone. Good Congregational singing. A cordial welcome. Bring your friends.

The Joint Boards of Hoge Memorial will meet at the Church Tuesday (tonight) at 7:30 P. M. Important matter of business will come up.

GLENWOOD METHODIST

The question is often asked; "Why do we have to suffer pain?" Next Sunday morning the sermon subject will be "The Philosophy of Pain." Come and hear the message, in which the mystery of suffering and sorrow will be explained.

Sunday evening the second sermon in the series of "What the Bible Tells Us," will be given, the subject being "What the Bible Tells Us About God." Our purpose is not to present any theories or opinions, but to plainly set forth scriptural facts. A cordial invitation is extended to everybody, to all of our services.

At the midweek prayer services the pastor uses as a scripture lesson the Sunday School topic of the following Sunday. Come and join us in the lesson study.

PENSION LINE THINNER

Commissioner's Report Shows Civil War Men Are Fading.

$4,000,000 Less Paid to Veterans in 1921—73 Soldiers Drawing Pensions for Service in Mexican War.

Washington.—The American pension system cost the public $265,201,982 during the fiscal year ended last June 30, according to the annual report of the commissioner of pensions. Of this amount $258,807,583 was paid out for pensions, the cost of maintenance of the system being $1,594,079.

That the number of pensioners is rapidly diminishing is shown in the statement that $4,000,250 less was paid in pensions during the last fiscal year than during the previous year; that 25,082 Civil war veterans died, as against 24,775 for the previous year, and that 21,259 widows died, as compared to 19,451 the year previous.

The number of pensioners on the rolls June 30, 1922, was 547,016, compared with 566,053 on June 30 the previous year. Of these 196,881 were Civil war veterans; 271,194 Civil war widows; 45,935 veterans of the Spanish-American war, and 9,198 widows of Spanish-American war veterans. There were 73 soldiers drawing pensions for service in the war with Mexico and 40 widows of soldiers of the war of 1812.

Several important modifications of the practice of the pension bureau were brought about during the year by departmental decisions. One decision held that a person who enlisted in the regular army subsequent to April 22, 1898, and was discharged on or before April 11, 1899, or who enlisted in the navy or marine corps after May 4, 1898, and was discharged prior to April 11, 1899, could be considered "a volunteer." This holding favorably affected hundreds of claims filed by widows and minors of soldiers of the Spanish-American war.

In the last fiscal year, 180,786 pension claims were disposed of and 2,269,767 checks prepared and sent out. At the close of the year 82,615 claims under various pension laws were pending.

THOUSANDS OF BIRDS SAVED

Blown Out to Sea From United States, They Land on Liner for England.

Liverpool.—Thousands of American land birds, blown out to sea by unfavorable winds, sought safety on the decks of the Cunard liner Scythia on a recent trip from New York and stayed on board until it docked at Liverpool. When misfortune overtook the feathered travelers they were migrating, probably from the North Atlantic states to the warm lands bordering on the Caribbean. Now many of them again are free, but in England, thousands of miles from their destination.

The great flock settled on the Scythia's decks when the steamer was about 400 miles from the American shore, and transformed it into a floating aviary. Wild canaries, robins, linnets, thrushes, sandpipers and juncos fluttered around the decks, perched on the rigging, and even penetrated the lounges and engine room. The passengers and crew cared for them, giving them warmth, food and shelter, but, even so, many of the smaller birds died from exhaustion. Three owls and a score of pigeons were easily captured.

Old sea travelers say they never have known birds to alight before in such large numbers on a single ship.

DIABETIC COMA IS ARRESTED

Medical Authorities Are Keenly Interested in Results Obtained by Use of Insulin Serum.

New York.—With the recording of what is believed to be the first case of diabetic coma to be successfully arrested, medical authorities expressed high praise for the treatment used—the insulin serum, a discovery of Drs. F. G. Bantin and C. F. Best, two University of Toronto graduates. The insulin treatment is taken from the pancreas of a pig.

Sixteen-year-old George Van Hassel of Brooklyn, taken to the hospital three weeks ago in a diabetic coma, a state heretofore regarded as hopeless, was given the insulin treatment and a few days ago was discharged.

Successful use of a serum to arrest the progress of gangrene also is claimed. Edward Trainer of Geelong, who froze both feet ten years ago, was admitted to a hospital after both legs and several fingers had been amputated in an effort to stay the progress of the gangrene.

As a result of the serum injections Trainer was able to use artificial legs when he left the hospital.

The discoverer is Dr. Benjamin Jabeus, who began experiments while attached to the laboratories of the A. E. F.

Wire Fence Kills Two Half a Mile Apart

Lufkin, Tex.—A boy and a man, although half a mile apart, were killed at almost the same moment by contact with a wire fence, charged by a high tension wire, which had fallen across it during a storm. J. D. Adams was killed in front of his home and Carman Reid, in a field out of sight of Adams' home, starting to go through the fence, touched it also with fatal results. A neighbor of Adams was shocked in trying to effect a rescue.

$80,000,000 From 1918 War Savings Stamps; If Kept Safely at Home It Means Better Times

THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS are now coming back to this community through the redemption of 1918 War Savings Stamps. This money has been kept safely for five years by the government. It represents the small savings of many people.

If the money from War Savings Stamps is kept safely here at home, it will do much toward creating better business conditions during 1923. It will put into circulation thousands of dollars that will reach their way to the merchant, the builder, the tradesman, the working man and the farmer. The government is extremely anxious that none of this money be wasted. In order to further protect the public, it is asking the co-operation of local financial institutions of recognized stability to assist in the redemption of 1918 War Savings Stamps and Victory Notes. Because of the fact that building and loan and savings institutions sold more War Savings Stamps during 1918 than any other group of financial concerns, thousands of holders of War Savings Stamps are redeeming them through their local building and loan companies. In doing this the holders are making certain that their money will remain safely at home, helping to build up their local communities.

State and government officials are pointing out that Ohioans have lost more than a hundred million of dollars in the last few years through investments that have grossly deteriorated in value or have proven worthless. They are fearful that some of the many millions of dollars to be poured into Ohio in cold cash during the redemption period will find its way into the hands of salesmen of worthless securities. To make such losses impossible, holders of War Savings Stamps are urged to consult with officials of their local financial institutions.

HOLDER, the Hilltop man. See me before you buy a home Hilltop 1013.

YANKS CORRUPT GERMAN POLICE

Chiefs of Two Divisions Complain of Americans Undermining Morale of Force.

LURE TRAFFIC COP FROM POST

Melodious Foreign Prisoners Stir Up Entire Neighborhood to Protest —Jailer Closes Jail and Goes on Joy Ride.

Berlin.—Heads of two police districts in Berlin have complained to Chief Richter that Americans are undermining the morale of their forces. They are unable to combat the sinister influence of the care-free foreigners.

The other night, traffic at the busy corner of Unter den Linden and Wilhelm strasse became hopelessly jammed when two Americans bound toward an expensive restaurant were suddenly stricken with pity for the poor officer who stood in the rain and cold wind managing all the traffic by himself. They invited him to accompany them and, ensconced in a cosy corner of a high-class restaurant, they bought him repeated rounds of Napoleon brandy until the policeman forgot the roaring traffic and passed an hour swapping anecdotes of the war. When he reappeared on his beat where frantic taxicab drivers were untangling their vehicles from a mass of horse cabs and omnibuses, he carried a quart of expensive liquor in his hip pocket. The inspector finally sent reinforcements to unscramble the traffic tangle.

Close Up Jail.

This offense of the Americans followed an early Sunday morning episode of two weeks before, in which a whole station was corrupted. Two Americans after a joyous Saturday night roused the exclusive West End with a ribald singing of some of America's best known barber shop symphonies. They were arrested and taken to jail. Refusing to be irritated by their arrest they prevailed upon one of the reserves to visit a nearby all night cafe and bring back champagne. With each visit of the police men, who arranged shifts between the station house and the cafe, the melodies became more mellow and the American repertory was varied with the old German favorites.

By five o'clock in the morning the neighbors began to complain and the indignant policemen decided, upon the suggestion of the Americans, to close the jail. Accordingly they repaired to one of the uptown hotels and visiting the rooms of several friends of the Americans, who were to sail for America the same day, pronounced all their passports invalid in such an earnest manner that the sleepy guests were obliged to buy more champagne when the "joke" was discovered.

Chief Is Indignant.

When the chief of the outlying station arrived and found the place locked up he was a bit more than surprised, but when his trusted officers finally returned in taxicabs, still singing snatches of American songs and telling about the "regular fellows" they had in jail the night before, he was astounded and penned an indignant report to the police chief, suggesting that all Americans be made ineligible for at least the quiet, residential district prisons.

Thus far there has been no ruling excluding the visitors from the United States from jails.

MONSTER CAST UP BY OCEAN

Part Whale, Part Turtle, Denizen of Deep, Is Found on Coast of Peru.

Lima, Peru.—The tidal waves which recently devastated parts of the coast of Chile, cast upon the beach a strange denizen of the deep, not seen in many years. Fishermen at Lurin, 25 miles from Lima, reported a huge cetacean floundering in the shallow waters of the bay. They declared it an unknown monster of the sea and said that they had killed it.

The director of the Natural History museum of the University of San Marcos and the official taxidermist made a trip to Lurin for the purpose of studying and classifying the strange visitor. They found an animal with the body of a whale, but with a head and extremities resembling those of a turtle. After examination they came to the conclusion that it belonged to the family of platanidae cetaceans, inhabiting the south Pacific waters. It is supposed that it was carried along by the Humboldt current.

The specimen will be mounted in a museum.

Why Pay 7 Per Cent or More

For Mortgage Loans on Columbus Residence Property When You Can Borrow Unlimited Amounts from us at 6½ per ct Without Commission

If you have good security there is no need of paying the higher rate. From a few sources money is obtainable at 6%.

The average lifetime of a loan is about three years, so that a 6½ % loan without commission is in fact a better proposition than a 6% loan plus the 3% commission usually charged on loans at that rate.

We have over $750,000.00 ready to loan on residence property in Columbus or suburbs—singles, doubles or apartments—at 6½ %. Prompt appraisements. Prompt closings. Bring us your applications.

We make either straight loans or monthly payment loans. If you have a loan now, on terms less satisfactory than we offer, why not let us take it up for you and save you money?

The latest addition to the many excellent organizations of the Hilltop, for the promotion of the community interests, is the Hilltop Circle of the Child Conservation League; with the officers as follows: Mrs. J. T. Evans, president; Mrs. T. S. Fox, vice president; Mrs. J. V. Witter, secretary; Mrs. F. W. Postle, treasurer; and Mrs. R. M. Fishpaugh, press reporter; the meetings of the league will be held on the second and fourth Mondays of each month; the next meeting will be held at the home of the president, and will be in the nature of a get-acquainted meeting. Rev. R. E. Shields, addressed the meeting and extended the use of the Church parlors to the league for their meetings.

The Columbus Women's club have gone on record with their protest against the return of Fatty Arbuckle into the film business again. The club adopted resolution addressed to Will H. Hays protesting against the showing of Fatty Arbuckle films, after listening to an address given by State Senator, W. E. Wenner of Ashtabula County, on "Selfishness, the besetting sin of the American Nation". Domestic club at West Jefferson, last week.

The regular monthly meeting of the Hilltop Chamber of Commerce will be held Tuesday evening at the basement parlors of the Hilltop Lutheran church; this will be a very important meeting and it is desired to have every member present; the Annual election of officers will take place; and other matters of importance will be brought up; if you are a member, and are interested in the Hilltop. BE THERE. Mr. Frank A. Doty, the new Advertising and News Manager of the Hilltop Record will be the speaker of the evening; and this will be followed by a smoker. Remember the Date, TUESDAY, JAN. 23RD, 7:30.

A most delightful birthday surprise party was celebrated at the home of Mrs. Fleming, in the honor of Mr. Charles Fleming, 2350½ W. Broad St. Last Sunday evening a most enjoyable evening was spent by the following guests: Mr. and Mrs. James Brown, Mr. and Mrs. James Young, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Orr, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Young, Mr. and Mrs. Lee Brown, Mrs. Ada Dwight and son, Miss Myrtle Dean, Mr. and Mrs. John Fallon, Mr. and Mrs. John Brown.

It has been the rule in the past, for the publishers of the Hilltop Record to accept a subscription said to have been paid for in good faith to some solicitor or agent and receiving no receipt. This has caused considerable confusion, and we deem it unfair to to the regular paid up subscribers, therefore in the future no recognition will be given to such claims. Anyone wishing to subscribe for the Hilltop Record, can call H. T. 701 or H. T. 582 and some one will call and receive your subscription, and receipt for the same; or you can hand the subscription price which is 50c to the carrier boy, who is authorized to receipt for it. Do not give your money or your subscription to anyone but the duly authorized carriers, or the regular news manager, or circulation manager.

The Record subscription is increasing encouragingly and we are improving the paper so that every home on the Hilltop will be members of the Record family.

During the month of December, we received two subscriptions and found incorrect addresses; will Frank Williams and Esther Whitaker, kindly inform the Record office of their correct address, and we will see they get the paper for the full time for which they have paid.

Mr. Karl T. Webber, attorney and one of the best known and long time residents of the Hilltop; is in Grant Hospital suffering from an inflammation of the knee joint. His condition is not considered serious, and his friends and all the people of the Hilltop will be glad to see him speedily recovered.

Look over the advertisements; you will find some special bargains in every one of the Hilltop stores. Patronize the men who are helping to make the Hilltop the busiest and best place in the city to live. They have just what you want, and their prices are as low or lower than they are over town. Keep your money on the Hilltop.

The marriage of Miss Gertrude Newhouse, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Newhouse of 363 S. Eureka Ave., to Robert W. Morgan, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Morgan, of 1338 Cole St., took place Monday afternoon at Wilson Ave. Church of Christ. Rev. J. J. Tisdall officiating; only the immediate members of the two families witnessed the ceremony. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan will make their home with his parents, at 1339 Cole St.

HILLTOP CITIZENS DOING PUBLIC SERVICE

What They Have Accomplished, or Helped to Do So in City and County Affairs

Mr. Fred W. Postle, 43 Eldon avenue, has been a resident of the Hilltop since 1908; and has been actively engaged in all of the improvements and developments of the Hilltop.

He was elected as a member of the city Chapter Commission and served on that body in 1913. That same year he was elected to the city council and served during the two following years.

For the past seven years he has served as a member of the City Board of Revision, and the City Board of Assessments, and is the only member of those two committees who has been consecutively on either Board since they were provided for. Each Board is made up of three men; and every City improvement that has been put in has been submitted to them for their approval before the improvement was started. They work in conjunction with the City Attorney, and the City Engineer, especially the latter whose figures and estimates they are often called upon to revise.

He is a charter member of the Westgate Lodge of Masons, member of the Westwood K. of P. Lodge. Organized the Hilltop Athletic Club, and incorporated the Hilltop Building and Loan Association. He also ranks among the leading Attorneys of the city with offices at 8 East Broad St. Another of the Hilltop residents that we are proud of.

PELICAN PECKS

A, B, C of Business

A is for Alban—a Plumber by trade.
He plumbs all the houses the builders have made.

B is for Bank, Citizen Trust and Savings,
With Worrel as manager, no need of it failing.

There's Griffins and Haunts and Today Brothers.

Z is for zest—we've plenty left over,
To tell more of THE TRUTH when again we get sober.

—THE PELICAN.

The Pelican has just broken out in a new adventure; it is a little early for Spring Poetry, but we will assume the risk of sending this forth to the readers of the Record:

Mrs. Della Nichols, a nurse, formerly of the Hilltop, who has been away for the past five years has returned and is now located at 371 S. Powell Ave., any one needing her services can find her at the above address.

Just received a shipment of American Salted Peanuts, also almons, of Spain, and Love nuts from Turkey. Come in and look them over. You sure will like them. Mrs. Dulgar's

The Beta Lambda Class of Glenwood Sunday School will entertain their husbands at the church, Tuesday evening, January 23rd.

Mrs. Walker, real estate dealer, has been confined to her home on South Terrace, for two weeks with flu.

The regular meeting of Robert Morris Social club, will meet at the home of Mrs. Dry, 186 Whitehorne Ave., Thursday afternoon, January 25 at 2:00 P. M. All members of Robert Morris Chapter of Eastern Star invited.

The Glenwood Woman's Foreign Missionary society will present the lecture, "Child Life in Many Lands". This will have many interesting lantern slides. Come Friday evening, January 19th, at 7:30 P. M. at Glenwood M. E. church. No charges for admittance.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Kramer of 2354½ W. Broad St., have both been on the sick list for the past two weeks, but they are both improving now and will soon be back to their normal selves again.

Mrs. Ed Wilson, of Seiller's clerical force, is at home, 24 S. Burgess Ave., with a severe attack of LaGrippe.

Miss Virgie Carter, bookkeeper at the Seiller department store, has resumed her duties in the office again after an absence of several days on account of sickness.

LOOK FOLKS!—A good time is going to be given by the Westwood Temple Pythian Sisters, Tuesday, Jan. 30. Watch next issue for further announcement.

Mrs. N. E. Walcutt, daughter Ethel Marie and son Ralph of 44 S. Wheatland Ave., are enjoying a visit in Brandenstown, Florida.

This coming Sunday night at Hillcrest Baptist church, the choir will render one of its fine programs of choice choruses. Many new voices have been added this season and are capable of doing some splendid ensemble work. One of the great numbers to be sung Sunday night will be the air and chorus—Inflammatus et accensus (When Thou comest), from Rossini's Stabat Mater. A rare treat is in store for any one to hear this number given. On account of the difficulty in having a soprano with the power and compass to sing the air which soars with sustained tones at High C, Mrs. Keiser will interpret the solo part.

On last Sunday evening a large congregation assembled in St. John's Lutheran Church, Broad street and Hague Ave., to hear St. John's choir present the superb cantata, Messiah's Advent. The members of the choir are the following: Suprano: Mesdames Raether, Smith and Mason; altos: Mrs. Wolfe and the Misses Wehrle and Grossman; bassos: Messrs. Raether and J. Howard Young; tenors: Messrs. Grossman and Dr. C. H. Luse. Mr. C. Grimm, director and Mrs. Lucile Mably, accompanist.

The Love Pirates of Hawaii is the name of an operetta which the Junior High School is now getting ready. This will be given at the West High School auditorium on February 9th. It is planned to give an afternoon performance for school pupils in addition to the evening performance. There are about 90 pupils in the cast and they are going through daily drill in preparation for it.

A Hilltop business man was confined to his home last week, with a severe cold; and when he returned to the store he brought forth this production. This was not the cause of his indisposition, however:

One hand out my brother,
As you pass along your way;
To a friend or to another,
As you meet them day-by-day.

Have a hand extended brother,
It's a friendly act for you;
To grasp the hand of another,
When by chance you meet as two.

Have a glad hand my brother,
Either on land or on the deep;
Shake off trouble, never shudder,
Be always jolly, never cheap.

Grasp another's hand my brother,
Be a Shepherd with the sheep;
It will cause you no bother,
As you sow, so shall you reap.

Miss Lilda Uhl, a pupil of the Wynter's School of Expression and a violin pupil of Miss Cecelia Burke, will give a program of readings and musical numbers at the Hilltop Church of Christ, corner of S. Burgess and Olive St., on Thursday evening, Jan. 25 at 8 o'clock. She will be assisted by members of the Ruth Circle and the Sunday School orchestra. Admission Ten cents.

The Highland Basketball Season started off with a game against Milo. Highland won this game by a score of 24 to 2. This is an especially pleasing start for the season, since last season was not a very successful one. This week's game is to be against Champion which is rated as being a strong team this year. This season's games are being played at the Armory located at 7th and High.

The Robbins-Geiser school of music at 76 Midland Ave., is one of the institutions of the Hilltop that is building a reputation for efficiency; which is evidenced by the fact they are giving over one hundred lessons a week. They have the most advanced methods of teaching, and give special attention to each pupil; They will appreciate a visit if you are interested, or if you have a child you wish to have instructed in piano, pipe organ, violin or elocution.

Chickens 25c lb. at HAUNTZ'S Quarter Sale.

I tell you, when it comes to dates,
My mother's just "the boss!"
She tells me all I want to know
'Thout ever gettin' cross.
You'd think she'd get mixed up sometimes—
At school I know I do—
'Bout Washington, and Plymouth Rock,
And 1492.

But mother says: "The war with Spain
Was fought in '98—
The year you all had chickenpox,
Exceptin' Little Kate.

"That year, of course, the Spanish ships
Were sunk in Cuba's channels;
'Twas summer, for I'd put away
You children's winter flannels.

"The Boer war in Africa—
That was a dreadful thing!—
Began in '99, I know,
Jack broke his arm that spring.

'Twas nineteen-four and winter too,
When Japs and Russians fought.
You almost had pneumonia then
From that bad cold you caught".

There's six of us, and we're mixed up
With history just that way.
Sometimes it's measles, croup, or mumps,
But there's no date that ever stumps
My mother, night or day!

RADIO DELIGHTS ISOLATED PEOPLE

Indians and Trappers at Grand Marais Get Programs Broadcast by Wireless.

ALL BREEDS ARE REPRESENTED

Colony No Longer Shut Off From Outside World by Winter—Radio Is Building Up the Community Spirit.

Do you realize what a wonderfully progressive age we are living in? See what the radio is doing for these people.

Duluth, Minn.—The wizardry of the wireless now ayes the Indian and delights the trapper and those other hardy souls of the winter isolated community of Grand Marais, Minn.

Originally a Hudson Bay trading post, Grand Marais lived its life after the rich pelt harvest had seen its day; became a loafing community, and still holds on—principally for the sake of housing men and their families, who make it their summer business to take out pulpwood butts and in winter, after the big game season, to lay a line of traps.

Naturally, in such a geographical location, neighborliness and community spirit must prevail throughout the long, bitterly cold, semi-dark winter. Parties at homes, "movies" and winter sports had constituted almost the entire means for entertainment for the people of Grand Marais. Then came, this fall, the strange thing.

Community Wireless.

A community wireless receiving set, bought and paid for through a general subscription, it was said, has been installed. Tall pine "sticks" spliced to give them height, reach into the cold sky, and from them swing the high-flung aerials. Below and in the largest meeting hall in the town the double-amplifier set has been tested out and found good.

Evening; a cold, gray day followed by a blasting wind from off Lake Superior; snow, snow, snow—tunnels through the drifts, all leading to the meeting place. The Scandinavian, the Montenegrin, the Indian, the American, the Canadian—all breeds that could be found in larger cities or greater ports—foregather at the shrine of the wireless. As they come they bring their log for feet and they deposit it beside the roaring fire in the open hearth.

Assembled, the company waits, breathlessly, whispering their comments, their expectations. Before the mysterious box the operator takes his place. Silence.

Then, out of the sky—out of the great beyond, so it seems to many—a clear soprano voice begins to sing, beautifully, harmoniously. Frenchmen and their wives, Italians and their wives, cross themselves, lower their heads and literally drink in the sound.

Indian Is Skeptical.

Suddenly there is a rush! An Indian, superstitry shining in his black eyes, dashes out and behind the building. He has gone to catch, red-handed, the woman who is singing from behind the building! He comes back, crestfallen, to receive a spatter of laughing criticism. Yet he does not believe. He asks to see what is back of the partition and stand where the radio set is housed. He is given a look. He takes his seat and watches, half believing only.

The light-hearted Scandinavians, Swedes, Norwegians, swing their red-dened hands in cadence with the voice that comes from whence they know not, nor care; they are enthralled, they are happy. "Ney' mind where she come from," said a Frenchy, "she one fine gal—I bet me."

Funeral Held in Airplane.

Long Beach, Cal.—William E. Dixon liked Long Beach so well he often said he hated to die and leave it and he made funeral plans accordingly. In compliance with his request, following his death, his ashes were taken in an airplane 2,000 feet above the business district and cast into the air.

Steal, Kill and Eat $2,500 Ram.

Bloemfontein, Orange River Colony.—Two hungry natives recently stole a ram, killed it and had a feast. The animal turned out to be a prize winner, owned by the government and valued at $2,500. Today the natives are in prison and confront 18 months at hard labor.

AMATEUR RADIO TOP HAT

It was won by Kenneth B. Warner, secretary of the American Radio Relay league, on the recent transatlantic tests in a wager with M. W. Burnham, prominent British radio amateur. Mr. Warner has just cabled to Mr. Burnham offering to wager that the American radio amateurs will be successful in receiving signals of British radio amateurs when they begin transmitting again. This time a frock coat will be the prize. Mr Warner is shown here with the top hat.

Community Grazing.

Regina, Sask.—The Metador ranch of 100,000 acres of grazing lands in the western part of the province is being acquired by the provincial government for community grazing. Representations now being made to the provincial authorities to place a superintendent in charge of the ranch with a number of cowboys and that a charge of 50 cents a head per month be imposed on all cattle pastured up to about 6,000 head.

Calf Ossified When Born.

Bloomsburg, Pa.—An ossified calf on the farm of W. C. Rishel at White Hall is attracting much attention, especially among veterinarians, who declare it to be the greatest animal freak they ever have seen. The calf was unusually small and was in the bony condition when born by a cow that previously had given birth to nine normal calves.

School Boys, in Secret Society, Stole 11 Motors

A secret high school society of automobile thieves was uncovered in Springfield, Mass., in the arrest of five high school boys who confessed to stealing 11 motors in the last two months. The nature of the society was discovered when one of the boys said he would be blackballed if he gave the names of others implicated. Confessions were obtained and police say they have the names of nine alleged members of the band.

WOMAN IS MADE CHIEF

Wife of White Man Becomes Head of the Kaw Indians.

Her Principal Task Will Be Pressing Large Claim Against the Government—Was Adopted by Old Chief and Became Nurse.

Ponca City, Okla.—The Kaw Indians not only have given women the right to vote, but have elevated one to the highest office in the tribe, that of elective chief. The woman is Mrs. Lucy Tayiah Eads, now Chief Lucy to all her tribesmen.

Chief Lucy is the first head the Kaw Indians have had since 1908, when Chief Washunga was frozen to death. She is the wife of John B. Eads, a white man. The two with their children live on the new chief's allotment, an inheritance of 800 acres. They are among the few who have not disposed of any of their property. They raise live stock of all kinds, are thrifty and send their children to white schools.

"The best material for the job," is the way the Indians describe Chief Lucy. John Eads, who is a cousin of James Buchanan Eads, who built the Eads bridge across the Mississippi river at St. Louis, proudly takes his place as husband of the chief. "She is an excellent wife, a fine mother, the best nurse living and understands the needs of her people," he says.

Lucy Tayiah, with her brother, Emmett, were adopted years ago by old Washunga, who led the Kaw Indians from their lands in Kansas in 1873 to a new settlement in Oklahoma territory. He sent them to Haskell institute, after they had completed the tribal schools. Here Lucy distinguished herself as a student and became interested in nursing. After her graduation from Haskell she went to New York city and became a graduate nurse. She remained there several years and then returned to her own people. Her brother also lives in the Kaw country, near the little village of Washunga, named after the old tribal chief.

The Kaws, like many other Indians, have sold and dissipated their holdings and are now reduced to poverty. Although their lands join those of the rich Osage, and oil derricks can be seen rising in the distance, the Kaws have reaped no mineral benefit as yet. A number of tests have gone down, but oil in paying quantities has not been found.

Chief Lucy has announced that the principal task of her administration will be pressing a claim of her tribe against the government for $15,000,000 which the Kaws allege is due them as payment for lands they owned in Kansas before their migration to the Oklahoma territory.

IS WORLD'S BEST CRIME CHASER

Chemist Becomes Best-Known and Most-Feared Detective in France.

HE USES SCIENTIFIC METHODS

Gives Little Attention to the Personality of Criminals or Their Psychology, but Works With Material Things.

Paris.—A chemist of recent years has become the best-known detective in France. Edmond Bayle is a small, dark, quiet man; he works in a modern-equipped laboratory in the Palais de Justice; he is feared by criminals of all classes, and his ultimate fame promises to surpass that of Alphone Bertillion, the French finger-print expert, who died in 1914.

Doctor Bayle is chief of the technical bureau of the Paris police department. Here all the criminal information of the republic is concentrated, classified and studied. From this bureau the expert chemist and physicist gives directions in the field of criminal detection. So successful has he been that the ignorant criminal classes have come to regard him as a worker in black magic.

Study His Methods.

His unique methods have been studied by the police department of New York city. Doctor Bayle rarely gives much attention to the personality of criminals or their particular psychology. He works rather with material things. His workshop consists of many rooms and passageways equipped with all the paraphernalia of a big industrial laboratory, and includes a photograph gallery. He has spectroscopes, microscopes and X-ray machines by the dozen, each fitted for a special purpose, such as examining blood spots, forged documents, counterfeit money, powder-burned clothes and the wreckage that is picked up on a criminal's trail.

Doctor Bayle's study is lined with books on science, and catalogue records of his work. In the records of his bureau there are registered no less than 8,000,000 names of persons involved in crimes, past and present.

Crime Detection Different.

"The detection of crime today is something very different from the popular conception," said Doctor Bayle. "The Sherlock Holmes and Arsene Lupin stories of great criminals and their feats are no doubt most entertaining, but that is all I can say for them. From my point of view, there is no crime that cannot be detected, that does not leave its traces behind, at least theoretically. For one thing, criminals, as a rule, are not very intelligent. The uneducated man usually commits crimes of passion and brutality; the educated man runs to fraud.

"My methods astound the ignorant criminals, and they have come to fear me when I enter the courts.

"The so-called intelligent professional criminals seem to have begun to try to thwart me, in a small way. Nowadays they endeavor, by wearing gloves, not to leave finger prints behind, but we have reached the point where their finger prints through gloves can be detected.

"Crime is really not very mysterious. The curious point to me is that the crimes which interest me most do not interest the public.

"There has been very great progress made in the detection of crime during the last six or eight years, particularly through the application of chemistry and photography to detection."

At Thirty-Five Is Mother of Fifteen.

Mouline, France.—"Come, it's time to get up, Pierre, Louis, Cecile, Georges, Lucie, Marcel, Gabriel, Jean Henriette, Alice, Marie, Gustave, Georgette, Francois and Susanne!"

This is the first of the many morning duties of Mme. Celian Cheminot, who, at the age of thirty-five is the mother of 15 kiddies.

Loses His Clothing in Battle With Bear

Harding, W. Va.—Eugene Zirkle of Mabie went looking for bear recently and he found one, weighing 450 pounds. Zirkle came home minus nearly all of his clothes as a result of a hand-to-hand encounter with bruin. Zirkle, Martin Wyatt of Harding, and B. C. Fornash and Eustin Swecker of Mill Creek met while hunting on the east side of Little river. Their four dogs rounded up a bear which was chased toward Fornash and Zirkle. The bear wounded two of the dogs and plunged into briars and laurel, followed by Fornash and Zirkle. Zirkle fired but missed the bear and continued crawling on hands and knees through the underbrush, losing his hat and coat. He caught up to the bear and in the struggle most of his trousers were ripped off by the bear's claws. The bear was shot by Fornash. They had difficulty dragging the carcass back to camp.

SCIENCE USES SHERLOCK STUFF

Fiction Detective Is Outdone in Quest for Clues to Secret of the Flowers.

EVEN BEES HELP IN SEARCH

Question of Which Buds Attract Honeymakers Has Important Bearing on Case—Bee Carries Tell-tale Entries on Legs.

New York.—While writers of mystery stories have been borrowing from science for improvement of detective methods, Dr. F. K. Richtmyer of Cornell university and Dr. F. E. Lutz of the American Museum of Natural History have been borrowing detective methods for scientific research in the last year. They have been engaged by the National Research council to solve one of the important problems of science. It is essentially a detective job, requiring the most delicate kind of trailing, spying, spotting and inside work.

The mere statement of the mystery does not suggest false whiskers, marked bills and the dictaphone. The problem is simply: "Why have flowers color?"

Until recently it was assumed, on orthodox Darwinian lines, that flowers had developed colors to attract pollenating insects whose visits were necessary for the manufacture of seeds. But recently this theory has been challenged. Experiments have indicated that insects may be color-blind. Some apparently cannot see red. Why should flowers be red if bees, moths and other pollenating insects cannot see red? Why should they display other hues, brilliant to the human eye but apparently invisible to insects?

Blind to Some Colors.

Other experiments indicated that if the bee, the moth and the fly are blind to some colors that we see they can see other colors invisible to us. They can see or in some way detect ultra-violet light, which is mere blackness to human beings. So it became important to learn how ultra-violet colors attract insects.

Doctor Richtmyer, a physicist of Cornell, and Doctor Lutz, an entomologist of the American Museum of Natural History, were chosen to work out the fine detective devices needed for sleuthing among insects and flowers.

The investigators were put on the case to discover whether flower colors, visible and invisible, are efficient in attracting insects.

A year's work on this difficult case has produced a good deal of information. Doctor Richtmyer has found flowers which reflect no ultra-violet color at all, others which reflect it richly, others which reflect it in varying proportions and some which reflect it strongly from some parts of their surface and not at all from other parts. The next step is to discover whether a bee shows a preference for flowers which are strong in ultra-violet coloring—whatever it may be—or whether it is biased in favor of any particular color.

A year ago the only method for solving the problem was leg-work. The scientist would have to pick out a bee and shadow it, following the bee from flower to flower and jotting down in his notebook, like a Scotland Yard man, what flowers the insect visited and what it overlooked. But it is difficult to follow a bee on its rounds, because it keeps darting off in unexpected directions and being itself lifting the other bees in the same field. It would take many years of field work by many observers to get enough statistics to establish what colors a bee prefers.

Here Doctor Lutz invented a short-cut, an armchair detective which enables a scientist in his laboratory to gather facts in one day which the field worker could not collect in a year. It might be compared briefly by saying that the bee keeps a diary and that the investigator discovered a means of reading the diary. Sherlock Holmes reconstructed the route walked by his friend Watson from the varieties of mud stain on Watson's boots. Similar telltale entries are recorded on the legs of the bee. Bees are placed on file by the bee in storing his honey, so that his conduct day by day for a whole season is registered in detail.

Traced by Pollen.

The grains of pollen indicate where a bee has been. Each flower has a different type of pollen grain. Under the microscope one is like a merry-go-round, another is a disk, a third is a lozenge, a fourth is covered with hair, a fifth is twisted like a figure 8 and so on. A grain from any flower is distinguishable from the grain of any other flower.

Take a bee, the investigator found, brush off his legs, examine the overlings under a microscope and from the character of the grains it is possible to tell every flower which the bee has tested of honey on its last flight.

By another application of this method it is possible to lay bare the history of a given bee for months. In storing honey in special cells for the young the bee, on each return to the hive, deposits the pollen grains that stick to its hairy legs. Examination of the group of cells under the microscope yields complete biographical data. It is possible to tell what flowers the bee visited and which were its favorites.

An enormous amount of information about bees may thus be obtained.

KINDNESS BENEFITS HIM

Indiana Bank Cashier's Courtesy to Widow Rewarded by Mention in Will.

Shoals, Ind.—Because Edgar Witcher, cashier of the Martin County bank, was kind to Mrs. Martha Mercer, and, as she expresses it in her will, provided an easy chair for her to sit in while transacting business in the bank, he receives approximately $1,000 by the terms of her will.

Mrs. Mercer was a widow without relatives. In the will she makes a specific bequest of $300 to Mr. Witcher and then makes him one of the five residuary legatees.

The estate will amount to about $7,000.

THE WORLD ON WHEELS

The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce report for 1922, shows that more than 90 per cent of the world's motor vehicles are in the United States. The world registration was 12,750,000 of which 11,500,000 are in the United States. It also reports turned out in America last year, was that the aggregate of passenger cars 2,287,000, valued at $1,374,487,000, and 240,000 trucks valued at $184,080,000.

The Chamber also estimates that 1,800,000 cars will be needed for replacement alone this year.

While Japan, in comparison with its population, uses more bicycles than any other country in the world. They are used there largely for commercial purposes, being better adapted to the narow streets than wagons or motor trucks. There are more than 2,000,000 of them in use most of which are made in Japan, England being the lead of the foreign countries sending machines there. America only sending about one-half the number that England furnishes.

WOULD RESTORE ANCIENT TONGUE

Scientist, Assisted by Self-Taught Indian, Seeks Key to Language of Quiches.

NEW METHOD BEING EMPLOYED

Hopes to Unravel Secrets of Maya Hieroglyphic Writings and Inscriptions Which Have Baffled Science for Centuries.

Charlottesville, Va.—Restoration of an almost forgotten language with the aid of an uneducated, nearly illiterate, self-taught, full-blooded Indian from the highlands of Gautemala, is being undertaken by Dr. William Gates of Charlottesville. The Indian is Quiche, and his language, which heretofore never had been thoroughly studied, bears the same name. The race and tongue are offshoots of the ancient Mayas, whose high civilization, the most advanced of any early American people, flourished before the Spanish arrived in South and Central America.

The Mayas built marvelous cities, palaces and temples, the ruins of which dot Yucatan and Guatemala. Their descendants are the Indians and peon class which inhabit that region today. Only the mountain tribes have escaped the advance of civilization.

Will Use New Methods.

Through the application of a new scientific method which reaches to the root of language, Doctor Gates expects to restore the decadent tongue, decipher the hitherto unraveled secrets of the ancient Maya hieroglyphic writings and inscriptions which have baffled archeologists for centuries, compile books for the instruction of the Indians and eventually restore the literature.

In his experiments the scientist has been recording on a smoked paper cylinder the vibrations of a stylus actuated by the Indian's words spoken into a mouthpiece. These records are preserved for study of the intricate variations of pronunciation, and already, working with manuscripts written in the Indian tongues by the earliest Spanish missionaries, Gates has found a remarkable preservation of the ancient speech.

The instrument he used is known as the "kymagraph," or wave-writer, and was invented by an eminent French ethnologist for language study. Doctor Gates was aided by John P. Harrington, ethnologist of the Smithsonian institution, who has studied practically all North American Indian languages.

Indian Teaches Himself.

Probably the most interesting feature of Doctor Gates' work is the Indian, Cipriano Alvarado, who assisted him. He never had written or read a word until he taught himself at the age of twenty-five. He lives in the almost inaccessible mountains of Central America, and is of the purest blood descended from the Maya empire builders.

Doctor Gates, who is director general of the national museum of Guatemala, has been studying the Maya inscriptions and ruins for more than twenty years. As a result of his present studies he expects shortly to be able to translate the entire writing system, and reveal the knowledge and attainments of the Maya civilization. Already several of the cabalistic symbols have been read, and it is expected that an announcement concerning the deciphering, of great importance to ethnologists and archeologists, will be made shortly.

The final success of his extended investigation, Doctor Gates said, was due not only to the use of the kymagraph in his research, but to study of the grammar of the present tongues and application of the rules thus worked out to the writing found in the inscriptions.

HEART BEAT IDENTIFIES THUG

Doctor, His Victim, Uses Novel Method on Holdup Man Patient in New York.

New York.—Harry Sinclair, arrested as a burglar suspect, has been identified by his heart throbs.

Thinking the prisoner's description tallied with that given by Dr. Henry Moeller of the man who one Sunday night entered his office as a patient and attacked and robbed him, police sent for Doctor Moeller. Assisted by his son, also a physician, Doctor Moeller examined Sinclair with a stethoscope and declared the prisoner's heart beat was the same as that of the man he examined in his office.

Sinclair, who said he was an actor, was identified also by Doctor Moeller's two daughters, Anita and Marie Moeller, as the man they saw in their father's office.

Thinks It Ambergris.

Durham, N. H.—The chemistry department of the State college is engaged in the examination of a lump of an unknown substance found on the sands at Hampton beach and thought to be ambergris. The finder of the substance is Miss Josephine Paige of Goffstown, N. H., a teacher at the Lincoln Street school in Manchester. The ambergris, if it turns out to be ambergris, is so very valuable that the small piece of it she has, it is estimated, would bring at present quotations about $5,000. So far the ambergris has fulfilled the tests required of it.

SELL HISTORIC SPOTS

Sites Might Have Become Famous if Used by Army.

Federal Government Proposes to Dispose of Real Estate Acquired in Early Times for Fortification Purposes.

Washington.—Bits of land which have, or, if developed, might have figured largely in the history of the South are included in the War department's "land junk" sale.

The bill authorizing the sale shows that the federal government plans to dispose of real estate which was acquired as early as 1790 for fortification purposes, but which modern warfare has relegated to the class of "surplus and unnecessary government property."

Communications received by a number of senators from Southern states indicate some of the property will be purchased by historical societies.

Examination of the history of the tracts to be offered for sale revealed that the deeds to two tracts, Old Fort Jackson at Savannah, Ga., and Ferry Point in Norfolk county, Virginia, were made out and stand today, to "Thomas Jefferson, President of the United States and his successors in office."

Another tract, Fort Nelson, also in Norfolk county, Virginia, and bought as a site for fortifications for Norfolk, is covered by a deed made out to John Quincy Adams and his successors in the office of President.

Two parcels to be sold also are shown to include Beacon island, off the North Carolina coast, which was acquired by the government in 1790, as a site for fortifications off Newbern, which was an important city at the close of the Revolutionary war.

Other sites to be sold are Fort Macon, near Beaufort and Morehead City, N. C., bought in 1810 and 1826 as a site for the defense of Old Topsail Inlet and Fort St. Phillip, on the Mississippi river south of New Orleans, which was acquired as "defense against the British" prior to the battle of New Orleans.

DIG UP PEAT ON "U" CAMPUS

Professor of the University of Michigan Sees Great Scientific Value in Discovery.

Ann Arbor, Mich.—In the excavations being made on the campus for the literary building and the physics building, Prof. H. H. Bartlett has discovered pellets of peat which will, it is believed, be of great scientific value.

It is believed this discovery will enable scientists to determine the type of vegetation existing in the glacial period. According to Professor Bartlett's theory, these pellets came from a peat bed that existed during the glacial period, disintegrated in the break-up and was carried out with the gravel.

The pellets found here are two and three inches across. They have no commercial value.

Old Woman Makes Own Dress.

Benton, O.—Although past ninety years of age, Mrs. Ellen McArthur is hale and hearty. She made an automobile trip from her home in Delaware to Kenton for a visit in the Henry Bradley home. She wore a dress that she made herself before she started. Mrs. McArthur's late husband, Allan McArthur, was the first white child born and reared in Hardin county.

Refuses to Accept Caresses of Husband Till He Bathes

Wichita, Kan.—Charges that his wife refused to accept his caresses and that he was compelled to wash his own clothes for more than a year were made by J. W. Owsley in his suit for divorce from Maggie Owsley in district court here. Mrs. Owsley replied that she refused to accept his caresses until he had taken a bath, the first, she believed, in several months. The divorce decree was granted to Mrs. Owsley.

The Heart of the Home is Music

It takes a heap o' livin' in a house t' make it home.
—Edgar a Guest

NATIONAL THRIFT WEEK
Saturday
Own Your Home Day

A house becomes a home because of what is in it. There must be joy and content-ment and love—a sharing of hopes, griefs and pleasures—— the giving and taking which join one to another. Music clothes the very furniture and fills each room with sunshine, cheer and comradeship. It is the very essence of home life, and without it a house is little more than a place of shelter. It keeps the boy and girl within the family circle and helps to develop the family ties. It creates a desire for wholesome enjoyment, so important in character forming.

You can make your home more attractive by that most satisfying pleasure to be found anywhere---an attractive home life. "Music in the home puts sunshine in the heart."

ANTELOPE DYING OUT

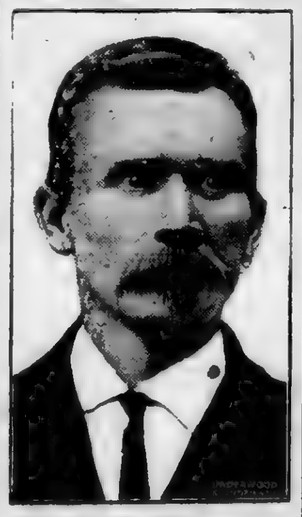
Animal in Danger of Becoming Extinct, Say Federal Officials.

Only 2,000 Left in United States, Is Estimate, With 380 Left in Yellowstone Park—Protection Urged.

Yellowstone Park, Wyo.—The American antelope is threatened with extinction, according to officials here of the Department of the Interior. Unless extensive protective measures are taken, officials declared, an animal widely admired for its coloring, delicate proportions and zephyr-like movements, soon will be seen only in [illegible].



There are probably not more than 3,000 antelope remaining in the United States, according to a statement, and the total number in the park is about 380. In 1908 the number was estimated as 2,000.

The cause of the antelope has been taken up by the American Bison society of New York. A number of societies interested in game preservation will meet jointly in the East soon to consider a program to protect antelope. Proposed measures include provision for an adequate winter range for Yellowstone herds, and for herds remaining in Oregon, Nevada, Idaho, Wyoming, Utah and California.

Last winter nearly a third of the Yellowstone park herds were lost as a result of heavy snows and the depredations of coyotes, wolves and mountain lions. A part of this loss was made up by birth of the young this spring.

The most serious menace to their preservation here is the absence of suitable winter range, according to these officials. Besides running the risk of starvation, owing to scant forage if the snows are deep, they are easy prey for predatory animals.

ONCE CYPRESS FOREST

Stumps of Colossal Trees Found in Washington Excavation.

Preserved Through Period of Time That Antedates Earliest Historical Records by at Least 16,000 Years.

Washington.—"Forty centuries look down upon you," said Napoleon to his army, drawn up before the pyramids in Egypt. In Washington today 200, perhaps 800, centuries look up at you. They look from the stumps of colossal cypress trees that grew 30 feet below the present level of the ground, away back in the geological past when the world was still in the making—even before the age of the last advance of the ice sheet which once covered the northern part of the continent.

When the steam shovelers, who are excavating the great pit for the Walker hotel on Connecticut avenue, began to strike stumps and logs of trees that were neither decayed nor fossilized, they thought they were out of luck, but when the numerous geologists and biologists of Washington heard of the discovery they considered that they were in luck. Groups of scientific men almost daily watch the progress of the excavation and marvel at the manner in which stumps, "knees," trunks, seeds, small branches and even leaves of the "wood eternal" have been preserved throughout a period of time that antedates the earliest historical records by at least 16,000 years.

The trees themselves may represent a thousand years. Their remains are found in three more or less distinct horizontal zones in what was at one time a swamp. Thus it appears that perhaps first one, then another and finally a third generation of giant cypresses, probably at least 200 years old, followed each other as the swamp gradually filled up.

Scores of stumps were found in the excavation, which covers an area of about an acre and a half, that were not less than six feet in diameter. Many were found between six and fourteen feet and the workmen assert that some of the fragments of stumps indicated that some of the trees growing in this ancient swamp were 25 feet thick, though these may have been clumps and not a single stump.

The fiber of the wood is well preserved and easily recognizable as that of cypress. Both sapwood and heartwood are preserved and in some cases even the bark. When first taken out the wood is rather heavy, being completely saturated with water. It is firm and compact, although it saws easily, and splits evenly. After a few days' exposure the water evaporates and the wood becomes very dry and light, and cracks.

The preservation of hundreds of tons of wood through such a long period must be largely attributed to the protection afforded by the water and ooze of the swamp. What happened was that the trees after dying, decayed to the level of the water of the swamp which preserved them from that point down.

Fossil trees of much greater antiquity are not uncommon, but the remains of trees still in the original organic condition, after the lapse of so long a period, are very rare. Sound wood has been found at Pompeii and wooden houses and boats up to a thousand years are not uncommon. Pious churchmen maintain that pieces of the Holy Cross are still extant.

In the National museum here is a piece of skin taken from a mastodon whose carcass was refrigerated in the remnant of a glacier in Siberia. It is pointed out that if the scientists who actually cooked and ate some of this 25,000-year-old meat, had been aware of the cypress stump in Washington, it would have been possible to have served the mammoth steaks planked on equally antique wood.

RED RUSSIA BUILDING AUTOS

Soviet Government Has Staff of Mechanics Trained in United States.

Riga.—The soviet Russian government has entered the motorcar manufacturing business, and the first car to come to Riga attracted much interested attention. It is gray in color, of 40-horse power, weighs 2,530 pounds, has a speed of 58 miles an hour and seats seven passengers. The operation of the factory where the first car was produced is in the hands of a staff said to have been trained in the United States.

SAVE MILLIONS FOR MOTORISTS

Federal Bureau Investigations May Revolutionize Motor Fuel Business.

USE "SUMMER GAS" FOR CARS

Experts Find a Cheaper Grade, 15 to 25 Per Cent Coarser Than Now Used, Brings the Same Mileage.

Washington.—Efforts to have congress appropriate sufficient money to permit completion of the work have centered attention upon highly significant gasoline experiments by the government bureau of standards, which indicate the possibility of revolutionizing the motor fuel business and saving millions to motor car users in fuel costs. Dr. W. James, one of the experts engaged in the investigation, was authorized by the director of the bureau of standards to give an outline of some of the results.

In brief, while many phases of the inquiry are far from completed, Doctor James disclosed that one outstanding result is the definite determination that, at least in summer time, gasoline, which is 15 to 25 per cent coarser than the average grades now in common motor use, can be used as effectively in engines as the present grade of fuel. When this becomes generally known, it is predicted that a heavier grade of gasoline will be manufactured for motor use, with a consequent lessening in the cost of production equal to the difference in the amount of petroleum required for its manufacture. Four barrels of petroleum would produce the same amount of the coarser, but equally efficient, gasoline for motor purposes that five barrels of oil now produce. Unless there should be a marked increase in production and refining costs, therefore, the use of the heavier fuel for motors would mean a saving of millions in the gasoline bills of motorists throughout the nation.

Outgrowth of War Experiments.

Information as to performance conditions of internal combustion engines, Doctor James explained, was requested of the bureau of stardards from many sources in the war, and the French commission particularly desired data on the performance of aircraft engines in high altitudes. Investigations along this line were undertaken and developed valuable information.

Dr. James gives an interesting account of how the investigation was conducted which led to discoveries about coarser gasoline. He explained that the objective was to ascertain how many miles could be obtained from a gallon of gasoline of each of various grades of volatility. Two factors entered into this inquiry, the first being the number of miles per gallon of a given fuel and the second the number of gallons of gasoline of that grade produced from a barrel of oil.

Four grades of gasoline were used in the investigation. The first was representative of the average grade of gasoline now being sold. The second was representative of the grade sold five years ago. The third and fourth were representative of heavier grades than have been sold heretofore for motor operation.

Four Test Cars Used.

One barrel of oil, he continued, would produce only 80 per cent as much gasoline of the grade that was sold five years ago as it would produce of the grade sold today. On the other hand, one barrel of oil would produce anywhere from 15 to 25 per cent more gasoline of the heavier grades, which made up the third and fourth types of fuel used in the inquiry, than it would produce of the present grade of gasoline. Four test cars used in the investigation, Doctor James said, were representative of about 75 per cent of those now on the market. These cars, each using a different grade of fuel and equipped with an instrument to register the number of miles per gallon of gasoline consumed, were driven over all types of roads and then the results of this practical experiment compared.

From these comparisons, the surprising fact was developed that the heavier grades of gasoline would produce the same number of miles per gallon in motor engines as the lighter grade now sold and the still lighter grade which sold about five years ago. This, of course, will mean that 45 per cent more gasoline of equal efficiency can be produced from a barrel of oil than was produced five years ago and that 25 per cent more gasoline than is now produced, of equal efficiency, so far as motor car use is concerned, can be produced from a barrel of oil.

DOCTOR DIES TO SHOW HOW

Arrested for Speeding, He Takes Poison Before Companion in Vancouver.

Vancouver, B. C.—William L. Shannon, thirty-three, a physician here, asked a companion if he ever had seen a man die. Doctor Shannon then drank from a glass containing poison and fell lifeless. He had just been arrested for reckless driving and released on bail. He was a graduate of McGill university and during the World war served with distinction in the Canadian army.

EVADES POORHOUSE BY DYING

Long Island Resident, Aged One Hundred and Six, Dies an Hour Before Time for His Removal.

Patchogue, L. I.—Death at the age of one hundred and six years prevented Joseph Vercento from being taken to the Suffolk county almshouse. It also freed, temporarily at least, his aged wife of the necessity of going to the same institution, against which she, as well as her husband, had been fighting during the last years of a long life.

Joseph Vercento lived with his wife, ninety-six years old, and his son, Joseph Vercento, Jr., seventy-six years old, in a shanty at West Hempstead. Up to three years ago he had been able to earn a pittance by doing odd jobs. When he could work no longer, the son became the sole support of the family, which he supported on earnings of five or six dollars a week.

Recently A. C. Still, overseer of the poor, has been allotting the Vercento family $8 a month out of the public fund for that purpose, but several days ago told the elder Vercento that he would be more comfortable and better cared for in the almshouse and ought to go there. Vercento at first refused to go, but gave his consent reluctantly recently on the condition that his wife should accompany him. The aged couple were to have been taken there.

When Mr. Still called to take them to the almshouse he discovered that the husband had died an hour before his arrival. The son said he believed he would be able to support his mother with some slight assistance. Mr. Still agreed that the township would do its part toward her support and charitably inclined residents of Patchogue, when the circumstances became known to them, volunteered to supply any deficiency that might be lacking.

Gets Back Long-Lost Dollar.

Marion, O.—W. G. Minshall is in possession of a silver dollar which he owned over twenty years ago and which had been lost to him for all that time. It was while Minshall was employed at the Hotel Marion that he dropped the dollar, and it found a resting place under the stone steps of the State street entrance. When the work of removing the steps started recently Minshall recalled his loss and informed the workmen. On removing the steps they found the dollar and returned it

CORELESS APPLE DISCOVERED

Variety of Fameuse Fruit Shown at Fruit Grower's Meeting at Montreal.

Montreal, Que.—Much enthusiasm was evoked at the fall meeting of the Pomological and Fruit Growing society of the province of Quebec by the announcement of the discovery at Abbotsford of a seedless and coreless variety of the Fameuse apple. Prof. F. C. Sears of the Massachusetts College of Agriculture, who was present, examined every essential detail. He said that if it could be produced it would prove of great value.

The seedless apple was discovered by accident and the exhibitor had no idea it was developed. He believes, however, that the variety could be perpetuated by grafts.

Moslem to Rebuild Towns.

London.—One hundred of the richest Moslems in Constantinople recently were invited to visit Gen. Rafet Pasha, the Turkish governor of the city, informs the Constantinople correspondent of the London Daily Mail. He proposed that each should "adopt" an Asia Minor village and assist to rebuild it from the ruins of war.

The rich men agreed.

Villages Raided for Geese.

Berlin.—In anticipation of Christmas a gang of goose thieves have raided 51 villages in the State of Hanover. Hundreds of fowls have disappeared as a result of the raids. A combined force of police and civilians is attempting to trace the thieves.

You will find all the news of interest in the Hilltop Record.

San Antonio—Lieutenant Fanda L. Johnson was instantly killed when he and another flyer attempted to occupy the same space in the air at the same moment; the result being the same as it is on the ground, when two "lizzies" try to pass on the same spot, namely a pile of junk. Both ships were completely wrecked, falling about 200 feet; the other flyer was not injured.

Lausanne—In the interest of future peace between Turkey and Greece, one million Moslems and Christians who live either in Turkey or Greece, must give up their farms, homes and business places and move on to find farms, homes and occupations elsewhere. The statesmen do not seem to care anything about the hardship entailed on individuals affected.

New York—Mrs. Edna Brush Perkins, wife of Dr. Roger Perkins and Mrs. Charlotte H. Jordan, wife of Edward S. Jordan of Cleveland; veterans of the first passage made by woman across the Mojave Desert in southern California, have sailed for Algiers, seeking a new adventure; they plan to cross the Sahara Desert alone; they will spend some time in the small towns at the foot of the Atlas Mountains, before they start on their lonesome hike.

ROUSING MEETING

A Rousing Meeting, A Bunch of PEP Uncorked, Enthusiasm on Tap, Plenty of Gas for the trip through 1923; you should have been present; it was like the "College Barn Storm-er". Yes, I am talking about the meeting of the Hilltop Chamber of Commerce; every one present got on the "DO SOMETHING JOB". Splendid suggestions were made for the improvement along many lines of interest to every resident of the Hilltop. Reports of the retiring officers and election of officers for the ensuing year were taken care of. The following were elected as the officers for the new year. President, J. W. Worrel; Vice President, R. G. Haunts; Secretary, C. E. Helmbrecht; Treasurer, Fred Raether; Directors, W. M. Brown; M. H. Prior, G. T. Cooper. Four new members were admitted to membership making the total of 101 during the year. Frank A. Doty, was the speaker of the evening, and gave some helpful suggestions on "What we hope to see, on the Hilltop in 1923". The Hilltop Chamber of Commerce is alive and is back of every interest that will aid in making this the most beautiful, healthiest and most desirable place in Columbus to live Watch for the next meeting. The new members admitted were W. M. Brown, G. T. Cooper, O. C. Voss, and Frank A. Doty.

Social Affairs

Mrs. E. J. Swigert of 100 N. Ogden Ave., entertained at her home on Thursday, Jan. 11, honoring the birthday anniversary of her mother, Mrs. Mary Huston. Twenty-three members of the Crego Guild Sunday School class of Glenwood M. E. church of which Mrs. Huston is a member. The day was very pleasantly spent in making quilt blocks, sewing carpet rags, social chat and victrola music. At high noon Mrs. Swigert and her sister, Mrs. Albert Metzger, assisted by little Miss Eleanor Swigert and Master Phillip Metzger, served a very pretty and appetizing lunch which included a beautiful birthday cake bearing the proper number of candles. It is needless to say how much this was enjoyed by all those present. The class presented Mrs. Huston with a choice Cincinnatus Bigonia. Those present were Mrs. Addie J. Wells, Mrs. Annie Bishop, Mrs. Carrie Bright, Mrs. Caroline Hughes, Mrs. D. J. Marshall, Mrs. D. B. Ong, Mrs. Dora Stottlemire, Mrs. Emma Gill, Mrs. E. Gould, Mrs. Mary Huston, Mrs. McElrath, Mrs. Mary Doyles, Mrs. Mary M. Jerman, Mrs. Mary Daugherty, Mrs. Martha Ketcham, Mrs. Mary V. Fullmer, Mrs. N. L. Clevenger, Mrs. Blackwell, Mrs. S. C. As evening approached the happy party broke up and as the guests departed for their homes they wished Mrs. Huston many more happy birthdays and declared her daughters royal entertainers.

The members of the Elite Embroidery club, and their husbands, gave Mrs. William Spangler a big surprise on Saturday evening, Jan. 20, Mrs. Spangler had very faithfully served as president of the club for the past year, and the surprise was given as an expression of appreciation of her services. She was presented with a beautiful Boudoir lamp, the presentation speech being made by Mrs. Elmer Houdashelt. A very enjoyable social time was spent after which, a lunch prepared by the club members was served consisting of hot baked beans, pickles, sandwiches, coffee, and cigars for the boys. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wilkins; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Fisher; Mr. and Mrs. Oris Jenkins; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bigler; Mr. and Mrs. George Ryan; Mr. and Mrs. Ivan Spencer; Mr. and Mrs. John Atkinson Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Houdashelt; Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Bents; Mr. and Mrs. Orman Spencer and Mr. and Mrs. William Spangler.

The members of the Hilltop Embroidery club celebrated their tenth anniversary, Jan. 17th, with a banquet at the home of Mrs. L. M. Seiller, in Upper Arlington. The husbands of the members were guests. The menu consisted of roast turkey and all the trimmings; after which a short business session was held for the election of officers, for the ensuing year as follows: President, Mrs. C. J. Randall; Vice President, Mrs. R. L. Milliken; Secretary, Mrs. Denny Wells; Treasurer, Mrs. W. K. Merriman; Press Reporter, Mrs. T. S. Fox; Flower Fund, Mrs. P. G. Gants. Those participating in the social evening were, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Matson; Mr. and Mrs. P. G. Gantz; Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Irwin; Mr. and Mrs. John Evans; Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Randall; Mr. and rs. R. L. The Hilltop Circle of the Child's Conservation League held their first get acquainted meeting at the home of Mrs. John T. Evans, [illegible] N. Terrace, Jan. 22nd. Twenty-three responded to the roll call and three visitors, Mrs. Lucy Bold, Mrs. Tidyman, and Mrs. Della Packard Chard. were present; the latter entertained with several of her writings, which were greatly enjoyed. The officers were hostesses to the Circle, and light refreshments were served. A story was arranged for, from nine to ten every Saturday morning. The first to be held at Mrs. Frank Brown's, 64 N. Powell St., Saturday, Jan. 27th, to which all children of the community [illegible] invited. The committee is Mrs. F. S. Fox, Mrs. Frank Brown and Mrs. W. H. Rankin. Other committees were named. The next meeting is to be held at Hoge Memorial church, February 5, at 2 o'clock.

The Men's Baraca Class of the Glenwood Church will serve a luncheon and be addressed by Hon. Charles C. Crabbe, Attorney General of Ohio, on Saturday evening, January 27th, at 7:30. Mr. Crabbe has chosen for his subject the following, "Obedience to Law is Liberty," and all who have heard Mr. Crabbe know that he will entertain with a splendid address; every man who has ever attended the Sunday School class at Glenwood, or any man who expects to become a member of the class, is requested to attend.

The Sunset Literary club met Wednesday at the home of Mrs. J. H. Sheeders, 2133, W. Broad Street. Continuing their course in the study of political education; they were very greatly interested in the excellent papers read by Mrs. H. D. Straubaugh, on "National Legislation" and by Mrs. Austin Hutt, on "State Legislation". Mrs. William Simpson of Newark, O., was assistant hostess to Mrs. Sheeders.

Mrs. William Spangler, 120 Eldon Ave., entertained the Elite Embroidery club at her home. Thursday, Jan. 18. Burgess Ave., February 1st.

The Rho Gamma society held their bi-weekly meeting at the Robbins Greiser School of Music on Monday evening; committees for refreshments, decorations, serving, program ticket, and receiving were appointed by the president. The next meeting will be held at 132 Midland Ave.

Don't forget the Box Social to be held Saturday, Jan. 27 at 6:30 P. M. at Hillcrest Baptist church under the auspices of the H. H. P. class. Everyone welcome if you bring the necessary requirements, girls—box for two, boys 75 cts. Money raised will go to our building fund.

PASSION PLAY

At Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church on Sunday night the beautiful slides made this year of the Oberammergau Passion Play which has been repeated by the villagers of that quaint little village for over one hundred years. The story goes that in answer to the prayer for deliverance from a pestilence the priest of the little village urged the villagers to done at that time and repeated every the entire life of Christ. This was present reverently and dramatically several years and has been visited by thousands all over the world. The Passion Play was not held during the war but revived again this year. This lecture will explain and show to the eye the beauty and pathos of the entire life of Jesus. There is no charge. Only the regular offering will be received to cover the expenses. Appropriate music will be sung by the Boys Chorus of over twenty voices and Miss Trone the soloist. The Orchestra will play and the pastor, Rev. Richard E. Shields will deliver the lecture. A cordial welcome to all.

Mrs. J. N. Alltop, of 95 S. Terrace Av., has gone to Logan, O., to be present at the reception of the new pastor of the M. E. church, which will be given Thursday and Friday nights. She will also visit Mr. Alltop's mother at Gore, O., who is celebrating her 94th birthday. She expects to remain about a week.

SCHOOL HAPPENINGS

The epidemic of colds and flu has affected the attendance at the different public schools on the Hilltop; the West Broad St. reporting 104 absent, the John Burroughs, reported 120 absent and Highand Avenue, reported 130 absent. None of them reported any very serious sickness, mostly bad colds.

Highland School won their basketball game again last week against Chapion by a score of 8 to 6. This was a fast and hard-fought game and as the score will show a pretty largely defensive game. This week's game is to be played against Mound Street School and is expected t obe a hard game. The Highland team is somewhat crippled by having Fred Williams on the sick list. The present first team is composed of Fred Williams, Robert Ingram, Devello Morris, Alfred Seddon and Thurman Wilkins. Only those are allowed to play on the team who are doing passing work in at least three major studies.

The datefor the Highland Operetta has been changed from February 9th to February 10th. The main parts in this operetta are taken by Cecil Morgan, Mary Rhinehart, Mary Virginia Hewitt, and Mr. Griffith. Mr. Griffith was given a part on account of there not being any boys whose voices were such that they could take this part. Most of the older Junior High School boys are at the stage where their voices are changing and they are unable to do much in vocal music.

WEST BROAD ST. SCHOOL

The West Broad St. School building is one of the liveliest places on the Hilltop; with one of the most interesting companies of youngsters in the city Last week all previous records were broken when the enrollment reached 700. At one time before the opening of the John Burroughs building, the enrollment reached 694. Since June 1921 about 340 children have been sent away from this school, the John Burroughs taking the largest number

There is an interesting contest on now between the various rooms as to who shall have the Gold Star given each week to the room with the best record for punctuality; this has so stimulated the pupils to be prompt that tardiness is almost unknown. Miss Judd with her crops of 21 excellent teachers, who are there whole or part time, have made the rooms so attractive with potted plants, pictures, etc. that both from the inside and the outside it has an attractive homelike appearance. This increased enrollment is due in large part to the building of so many new homes in that northwest section of the Hilltop. Another new school building for the Hilltop is one more thing for the Hilltop Chamber of Commerce to work for.

Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Swinehart, have just moved into their new home so recently completed, at 249 N. Warren Avenue.

Miss Catherine Ellen Albright, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Albright, 2154 Sullivant Ave., a pupil of Miss Minola Hatch, of the Capital College of Oratory and Music; gave a group of readings at the banquet of the Building and Loan Association of the Jeffrey Manufacturing Co., Saturday evening.

Mr. J. H. Kramer, 2354 W. Broad St., has been confined to his home for several weeks with a very aggravated attack of the Flu; Mrs. Kramer reports that he is improving slowly.

Mrs. Ed. Wilson of the Seiller Store, declares she was not sick with the LaGrippe, as the Record stated last week, but you will have to ask her what the specialist told her was the matter with her ears.

Mr. F. L. Sulzberger, the Jeweler and Optometrist, is among the many who have fallen a victim to the epidemic of Flu, which is so prevalent just now.

CORN IS UNDER PROBE

United States Chemists Are Making Thorough Investigation.

Seek to Know Why Europe Prefers Argentine to United States Product—Vegetable Proteins Now Being Analyzed.

Washington.—In an effort to determine the reason for the preference of European countries for Argentine or flint corn to the corn produced in the United States, the Department of Agriculture, through its bureau of chemistry, is undertaking an extensive investigation. According to W. G. Campbell, acting chief chemist, the investigation will be conducted through a laboratory on crop chemistry, recently established, which will determine if there are any fundamental chemical differences in the composition of flint or hard corn and the dent corn largely produced in the United States.

"It is known, for instance," says Mr. Campbell, "that the application of certain fertilizer to a crop like corn will increase the yield quantitatively.

"However, practically nothing is known about quality relations; that is, whether the proteins, vitamines or mineral components of the corn fertilized in such a way are better suited to animal and human nutrition than those of unfertilized corn. Varietal differences will be studied from a chemical standpoint.

"One of the most important researches now under way is that upon vegetable proteins. Inasmuch as nitrogen is an essential part of animal tissue, and the animal can obtain this necessary nitrogen only in the form of protein in its food, it is obvious that this class of seeds is of prime importance. This research involves the very existence of all animals and is inseparably connected with the field of nutrition.

"The amino acids of the proteins of several agricultural products have been separated and studied, with the result that it is now possible to supplant such basic feeding stuffs as corn with small quantities of other feeds, such as peanut meal, soy-bean meal and coconut press cake, which contain the very amino acids corn lacks, thus making a feed that will supply all the amino acids necessary for growth. The practical results of this should be a greater and more profitable utilization of our largest cereal crop, corn."

WOMEN IN RUSH TO GOLD FIELDS

Elbow Men in Scramble for Locations in Oatman District in Arizona.

BLOOM NOT OFF FIRST RUSH

Soldiers of Fortune, Young and Old, Flock From All Sections of the World—Old Mine Resumes in Search for Wealth.

Phoenix, Ariz.—Soldiers of fortune—young and old, both men and women—are still flocking to Oatman, in Mohave county, to prospect for gold, and many of them are finding it. The Oatman gold fields are the most active on the North American continent and the bloom is not yet off the first rush. Weather-beaten adventurers who got the word while digging away in far-away parts of the world like Africa are arriving with all the enthusiasm of their first hunt.

The old Goldroad mine at Oatman has resumed, and to those who know about gold mining that news carries significance. It means a permanent camp in all likelihood and development akin to that of the gold fields of Nevada. The United Eastern Mining company is cutting a drill station on the tenth level (1,900 feet) and at the breast of the 1,000-foot crosscut into the hanging wall. The drill will be pushed down an angle 2,000 feet, it being intended to cut the known big vein at a depth of 2,600 or 2,700 feet below the apex. That is one of the biggest operations going on at Oatman, one that may mean millions.

Work on Big Scale.

The Lucky Boy Mining and Milling company has started another hole on its property which is expected to strike a vein at 600 feet. The Lucky Boy is financed in New York and its campaign is on a big scale. The Bonanza Placer company has run across a silver ledge paying 200 to the ton and work has been begun to take out the profit. The Frisco mine is pushing its drilling, with pay in hand and more in sight.

Other companies, big and little, are scratching and gnawing at the earth in all directions. Not far from Oatman work is going forward evenly at Mineral Park in the turquoise mines, among the largest in America, owned by the Tiffanys of New York, which first led adventurers up into the region from Mexico as far back as 1530. It is history that at that date several hundred Spaniards and 14,000 Indians left Mexico City to find the precious treasures of the Seven Cities of Cibola, in the present state of Arizona, and that from 1530 to 1540 Cortez sent four expeditions up from Mexico, one of which he headed himself. Friar Marco de Nisa it was who brought back to the Spaniards the wondrous tales of the Cibola villages where "they use vessels of gold and silver, for they have no other metal."

But the present prospectors at Oatman are all of the sort of folk who never look back. They live romance instead of reading it; their lives are filled with the adventure of pioneering, unchanged from the days of Cortez except for modern settings. There's still danger enough to make it attractive, what with dynamite and moonshine whisky and the greed impulses that follow in the train of sudden wealth.

Named After Early Settler.

Oatman was named after Royce Oatman, a settler, who came with his family from Missouri in 1851 and located at Oatman Flat. The parents were killed by Indians and two daughters, Mary Ann and Olive, seven and sixteen years old, were carried off as slaves. Mary died after having been traded to several tribes, but Olive survived and was recovered by American troops five years later. She was sent East to be educated and returned to Arizona, where she lived to a ripe old age and was a leader in social affairs. However, she always wore a veil in public, for the Indians had tattooed their tribal insignia on her chin and lower jaw.

Gold was discovered in Oatman by United States soldiers in 1866. Johnny Moss made the first big strike. The gold hunters of California heard of it, and soon George Hearst, father of William Randolph Hearst; Levi Parsons, Joe Clark and other notable figures came over and started a prospecting syndicate. Many a fortune was taken out of the earth in the years that followed. But the real Oatman boom began with the finding of a fabulously rich ledge by the United Eastern in 1914, which shows no signs of ending.

FOGS RAISE LONDON DEATHS

Responsible Also for Greatly Increased Expenditure for Lighting—Bronchitis Leads.

London.—The recent fogs which have prevailed in and around London are responsible not only for a greatly increased expenditure for lighting, but have caused more than the usual amount of sickness and suffering to the population. This is set forth by medical experts, who quoted statistics to show that for one week the death rate in London was 14.3 per 1,000, against a death rate for the whole of England and Wales of 12.4 per 1,000. Deaths from bronchitis and bronchopneumonia rose to 286 from the previous week's [illegible] of 186.

PREDICTS LONG LIFE FOR SUN

Swedish Scientist Advances Theory of Light Arising Through Radioactivity.

TELLS OF SOLAR CONDITIONS

Dead Celestial Bodies May Flame Up Again If They Wander Into Regions Where Production of Heat Takes Place.

Stockholm.—"The sun can keep on shining at the present rate for another 26,000,000,000 years, and if human culture is to perish it will not be for lack of sunshine." This startling and whimsical statement was made in the course of a recent lecture by Dr. Svante Arrhenius, the Swedish authority on astrophysics, in which he explained certain theories and discoveries regarding solar conditions.

"Suppose the sun were a mass of coal," said Doctor Arrhenius, in order to illustrate his problem. "Giving forth heat energy at the present rate, it would then have lasted only 4,000 years, or about half as long as the period of known human history. But when there were living things of some kind on earth at least 1,000,000,000 years ago, and since there has evidently been very little deterioration of the sun during that period of time, any theory of the expenditure of solar energy must provide for upward of 100,000,000,000 years."

His Theory of Light.

Though it is difficult to interpret Doctor Arrhenius in popular language, it may be of interest to state his general theory. Heavenly bodies begin as cold nebulous masses of hydrogen, helium and the so-called nebulium. Light then arises through radioactivity. The hydrogen is condensed to form the other two elements, helium and nebulium, and from these develop a whole series of heavier elements, the most abundant of which is iron.

After this stage has been passed, the radioactive elements again resolve themselves into unstable elements and produce helium. This chemical process, going on in cycles, accounts for the lavish production of light and heat by the sun.

What becomes of dead suns and stars? Doctor Arrhenius replied to this question that celestial bodies which have burned out may flame up again in case they happen to wander into nebulous regions where condensation and production of heat again takes place. Thus he explained the discoveries of new stars.

Doctor Arrhenius paid a tribute to the successful work of American astronomers, remarking wistfully that, in addition to bright skies, they are also favored by ample funds for research and experiment.

RADIO SENDS BURIAL SERVICE

Treatment Prescribed by Wireless Fails to Save Life of Skipper Stricken With Pneumonia.

New York.—Capt. J. Matthews of the steamship Hatteras, bound for Belfast and Cardiff, was dead, four days of constant exposure on the bridge in the gales of the Atlantic had caused him to succumb to pneumonia.

There was no physician aboard. Treatment prescribed by radio from the Red Star liner Finland had been administered.

Later came word by radio to James Ferrick, wireless operator of the President Adams from Chief Officer George Bandell of the Hatteras:

"Captain Matthews died this morning. No Bible aboard; no copy of burial service. Please wireless us burial service and prayer for the dead."

Purser W. G. Hughes of the President Adams hurriedly brought a copy of the Episcopal prayer book to Operator Herrick.

Chief Officer Bandell wirelessed back at 12:30 that the prayers had been received.

"Body buried at noon with usual rites," he added.

FOR A SUMMER WHITE HOUSE

Baltimore Lawyer Leaves $200,000 to the United States for President's Home.

Baltimore, Md.—A provision to erect a summer White House for the use of the President and a provision to establish a public park in Baltimore were made in the will of J. Wilson Leakin, lawyer. The will was probated here in the orphans' court.

For purchasing land and erecting the summer White House, $200,000 is left to the United States. The site is to be within motoring distance of Washington. If the legacy is not accepted by congress within 18 months after Mr. Leakin's death, the $200,000 is to become part of the residue of the estate.

Bootblack Is Rich, Says Wife.

New York.—Alleging that her husband, Nicholas Laprete, a bootblack, has a net income of $70 a week, owns a handsome house and has a bank account besides, Mrs. Katherine Laprete applied to Justice Callaghan for $60 a week alimony and $500 counsel fees. The trial of the matrimonial action is pending. She charged cruelty.

HOT ON MOON AT NOON

Temperature Drops Below Zero at Night, Says Professor.

Heat Measurement Involves Use of Delicate Instrument Which Will Detect Heat of Candle Miles Away.

Cambridge, Mass.—The temperature on the moon probably ranges from well above the boiling point at "noon" to far below zero during the night, scientific observations indicate, Prof. Donald H. Menzel of Princeton said in a paper submitted to the American Astronomical society.

The paper outlined new methods of calculating the temperatures of the planets, emphasizing that the tentative results reached by these methods were not final.

"Whatever the amount of water vapor present in our atmosphere," he said, "the indications are that the surface of the moon is definitely heated.

"The values for Venus and Mars are very dependent upon the water vapor and very little can be got from the observations. Both planets have an atmosphere, Mars' being very thin, and that of Venus more like ours. The results indicate the temperature of the quarter of Mars during the day may be as high as 20 or 25 degrees centigrade, with a large fall during the night. Venus' temperature is higher than our earth's.

"For the two larger planets, Jupiter and Saturn, they radiate some heat of their own. If they were warmed only by the heat of the sun they would be 160 to 190 degrees below zero centigrade.

"The temperatures obtained for these planets are probably fairly accurate and we have for Jupiter obtained something less than 90 below zero centigrade, while Saturn is hotter by some 20 degrees."

The heat measurements as made at the Lowell observatory in Arizona, involve the use of a delicate instrument known as the thermocouple, which is capable of detecting the heat from a tallow candle at a distance of many miles.

SMALLEST TUBE RADIO SET

Presented with the smallest tube radio receiving outfit by his associates at the federal board for vocational training of war veterans in Washington, R. Edwin Joyce is shown listening to a concert that was broadcast from St. Louis. Joyce was in the hospital at Washington, where a leg was recently amputated. The miniature tube set is the invention of Barney J. Foy, who is in charge of the electrical training course at the Washington bureau for war veterans. Tests made prove the small set to have the receiving scope of the largest audience units. The complete set may be carried easily in the palm of the hand.

HE BELIEVES IN RECIPROCITY

A Negro Tells Judge Buckner "Same to You" When Offered Advice.

Kansas City, Mo.—It happened at the session of the Jackson county parole board. Sixty-five men on parole from sentences in the county jail or the penitentiary were being questioned by the Circuit court judges as to whether the various provisions of the paroles were being obeyed.

Jesse Harris, a negro, was one of those questioned. Jesse declared he was working now and keeping out of trouble. As the negro started to leave the courtroom Judge Thomas B. Buckner, a member of the parole board, admonished:

"You be a good boy, Jesse."

"You do the same, judge," returned the negro.

Woman Deposits 2,800 Cents and 634 Nickels

Pittsfield, Mass.—A deposit of 2,800 pennies and 634 nickels, making a total of $59.70 was deposited in the Great Barrington Savings bank in that town by a woman residing in New Marlboro.

The coins weighed 18 pounds and were the accumulation of nine years' savings.

This is the first time in the history of the bank that a deposit of this size in small coins has been received.

Lester Edwards, 17 year old youth who was charged with manslaughter last week, for reckless driving of the automobile which collided with the taxi, causing the death of Miss Frances Allen. This should be a sufficent warning to other young people who forget the rights of others when they get at the wheel, and have their foot on the gas. A term in the penitentiary would be a sad result of the "Joy Ride" that bunch of young people were taking, when the accident happened.

The unusual happened the other day when a man convicted for running down and killing a woman more than a year ago; presented himself at the Penitentiary to begin his sentence. His commitment papers not having arrived, he was refused admittance; or in other words was "locked out" instead of "locked in". However, they accommodated the gentleman by detaining him until the commitment papers arrived.

Vol. 6. The Hilltop, Columbus, Ohio, February 1, 1923 No. 45

Social Affairs

Glenwood Camp No. 7682 R. N. of A. installed the following officers for the ensuing year: Oracle, Mrs. Julia Basler; vice oracle, Mrs. Magdaline Williams; chancellor, Mrs. Gladys Baer; receiver, Mrs. Helen Hoffman; manager, Mrs. Katie Martin, Mrs. Lillian Harper, and Mrs. Musser; recording secretary, Mrs. Boyd; marshal, Mrs. Anna Gamn; assistant marshal, Mrs. Mamie Rhoades musician, Miss Bina Martin; inner sentinel, Mrs. Elizabeth Russell; outer sentinel, Mrs. Stella Seltzer.

Despite the icy weather and the prevailing illness seventy were present Tuesday evening, January 23rd, when the Beta Lambda class of Glenwood Sunday School, entertained their husbands. The comfortable and cosy atmosphere of the church basement, the jolly games and the delicious and substantial eats, all combined, made the evening a most enjoyable one. The following were the hostesses: Mrs. Huston, Large, Legg, Lourie, Mann, Mider, Meyers, R. C. Milliken, Moore, Oberholt, Postle and Young. Mrs. L. M. Earle, press reporter.

The rendition Tuesday night of the Rose Maiden by the Hillcrest Baptist choir was a most gratifying success, and the members of the choir wish to express their hearty appreciation and thanks to all and the many generous parties who graciously paid 5, 10 and as high as fifteen dollars for tickets and distributed them among their friends that they might have the opportunity of hearing their beautiful work.

Many urgent requests came in after the performance for a repetition, so the matter will be discussed at Friday night's rehearsal and if decided to do so, the tickets will likely be put on sale at one of the Hilltop stores at a moderate admission. Announcement will be made through the Hilltop Record.

The Columbus District of the Ohio Synod's Woman's Missionary conference meets on next Thursday, February 8, in St. John's Lutheran church, Broad street and Hague Ave. About 200 delegates are expected. There will be a forenoon and afternoon session, and an address in the evening by Rev. A. A. Shu of Delaware.

The public is cordially invited. The women of St. John's will serve delegates and visitors with dinner and supper in the basement rooms of the church.

Dr. and Mrs. G. R. Robbins, of 67 Midland Avenue, returned Monday from Sidney, Ohio, where they have been holding evangelistic services for the past two weeks, having met with excellent success in the work. Dr. Robbins preached every day, and some times three and four times on Sunday; Mrs. Robbins addressed woman's meetings and each afternoon led a woman's prayer meeting. Dr. Robbins has received a very urgent call to a Baptist Church in Cincinnati, Ohio, as their pastor, but feels his call to the larger work of pastor-evangelist. He will remain at home for a few days resting up before going to his next engagement.

Miss Edith Smith, of 2402 1-2 West Broad Street, will leave Thursday, February 8th, for Los Angeles, Calif., where she will be married on March 6th, to Mr. Henry Smith, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Henry Smith, formerly of West Town Street. Mrs. Jennie Smith, mother of the bride-elect will accompany her west and remain until May.

The Girls of The R. L. Dollings Co. gave a dinner last Wednesday evening at the Maramor, in honor of Grace Wyman, who has resigned, after being with the company for six years and a half. Covers were laid for twenty-five. The guest of honor was presented with a beautiful bouquet of American Beauty roses.

Mrs. A. L. Ogg, 135 N. Warren Ave., was called to Athens, O., because of illness in the home of a daughter, Mrs. E. T. Hayes.

By mistake the next meeting of the Hilltop Circle of the Childs Conservation league was announced for Feb. 5th, instead of Feb. 12th, at the Hoge Memorial church.

Catherine ————? says, "My Hubby was in Detroit last week for three or four days, but I don't want it in the paper." So we have thought best not to mention it.

The directors of the Hilltop Chamber of Commerce at their first meeting selected the following working committees: Advertising and Publicity, Frank A. Doty; Chairman, M. W. Seiller, W. M. Brown; Membership, Rev. J. W. Weigrich; Chairman, G. T. Cooper, C. E. Heimbrecht; Industry, T. C. Mitchell; Chairman, H. R. Gibson, R. A. Percy; Civic Betterment, Rev. R. T. Stimmel; Chairman, Miss Edith Robbins, Carl W. Hitsch; Library, Rev. R. E. Shields; Chairman, Rev. R. T. Stimmel, Dr. E. W. Martindale. The matter of the proposed skip-stop was considered and the directors were unanimous in their opposition to it; and instructed the secretary to write a letter to city council, and to the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, protesting against the proposition. The first noon-day luncheon will be held Thursday at 1 P. M. at Dulgar's, and every member of the organization is expected to attend these luncheon's. Call up the secretary, C. E. Heimbrecht at Hilltop 2324 and get the time and place for next week. Come on, here we go, get in.

The carrier boys of the Record have been afflicted like the rest of the people and several of them have been unable to carry their routes; which necessitated having a substitute; perhaps they did not reach you last week, if so, let us know, and we will be glad to see that you get the paper. Also, give the boys a chance.

Mr. and Mrs. William Dulgar will leave Sunday for an extended trip to Florida. They expect to be gone for some time, and will visit St. Petersburg, Palm Beach, and other places. Mrs. Dulgar wishes her patrons to know that she has made every arrangement for their care during her absence. She has one of the best cooks in the city and every care will be shown the patrons.

Rev. and Mrs. C. E. Turley, of Oxford, Ohio, were guests of their mother, Mrs. Sarah A. Gray, 73 Highland Avenue, last week.

February Brunswick Records Now on Sale. G. T. Cooper, 2361 West Broad St.

The following letter was received from a former Hilltop resident, the father of Mr. Ray G. Haunts, proprietor of Haunts Groceries.

Denver, Colo., Jan. 26, 1923.
Publisher Hilltop Record.

Dear Sir: I wish to tell you how much I have enjoyed your paper since I have been in Colorado. I have received it each week and it has made my home town seem not quite so far away. I have been here almost two years and have entirely recovered my health. I have been working since the first of the year in one of the leading markets in this part of the city. There is no doubt Colorado has a wonderful climate. From my house I can see the mountains covered with snow the year around. The scenic trips are beautiful and can be made by auto any time of the year. I never knew how to fully appreciate the Knights of Pythias order until I came here a stranger. They took me right into their midst and spared no effort to make me feel at home. The people as a whole are very friendly, most of them having come here from some other state. I have met quite a few from Ohio. I expect to start on my trip back to Columbus, September 4th. I will drive through in my car and hope to make the trip in eight days. I have enjoyed my stay here but will be glad to see my home and friends once more.

Yours very truly,
JOHN W. HAUNTZ,
4345 Yates St.

Mrs. G. T. Cooper who has been on the sick list is recovering.

Mrs. C. E. Heimbrecht and daughter are both recovering from an attack of the epidemic which is troubling most everybody on the Hilltop.

For Flu, Cold, consult N. T. Miller, Chiropractor, 39 South Terrace, Hilltop 549.

The Glenwood Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, will hold their regular meeting at the home of Mrs. George Schaffer, 99 North Park Avenue, Wednesday, February 7th, at 2 P. M. Study the mystery box in the January Friend. A large attendance is desired.

We, the members of the Christian Endeavor society of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian church, in the passing of our beloved fellow member, co-worker, and friend, Thomas Herbert Jones, offer the following tribute to his memory:

Inasmuch as the Father in Heaven has seen fit to elevate from this earthly sphere to the unknown heavenly land our beloved friend and associate, Themas Herbert Jones. Therefore:

Resolved, That we, as a group of young people, feel deeply our loss.

Resolved, That we, at the same time, feel quite as deeply that, while we have lost, he has gained his ultimate reward in heaven.

Resolved, That we unquestioningly submit to the Divine will and recognize the fact that our Heavenly Father doeth all for the best.

Resolved, That we extend our sincerest sympathy to the bereaved father, mother, family and friends.

Resolved, That we stand ready to perform any act of Christian service, which might in some small measure lighten their grief.

Resolved, That a copy of these Resolutions be presented to the family, a copy be placed upon the records of the society, and a copy be published in the Hilltop Record.

EDNA KADEL,
FRED C. AULT.

HILLTOP CITIZENS DOING PUBLIC SERVICE

What They Have Accomplished, or Helped to Do in City and County Affairs

Mr. H. C. Cain, Secretary of the City Board of Purchase, resides at 2045 West Broad Street, where he has lived for the past seven years. He has been a resident of the West Side for 33 years, and has been in public service for the past twenty years.

He was first appointed to the position of bookkeeper in the city auditors office, May 4th, 1903. Having served in all the positions in the office, up to and including chief deputy, in 1908. He was elected city auditor in 1910, and was the first city official to be elected for a third term, which ended December 31st, 1916. Mr. Cain assisted in the re-appraisal of Franklin County Real Estate in 1917 and 1918. On February 1st, 1920, he was appointed bookkeeper of the Municipal Electric Light plant; and June first of the same year he was appointed to the position of Secretary of the City Board of Purchase, which he now holds. In his present position he has a responsibility which few of the citizens realise, looking after the bids and the purchase of all the supplies for the various departments of the city. Comprising almost everything from a paper of pins to a traction engine. Mr. Cain is another of the Hilltop men who have commanded the attention of the citizens of this capitol city, by their faithfulness and efficiency in the duties of office, to which he has been chosen.

Hilltop Deaths

The funeral of Thomas Herbert Jones, son of Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Jones, was held Saturday at the Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church; Herbert was a senior at West High School, a member of the Hoge Memorial Church, and the De Molay Lodge, an organization for sons of Mason's and their chums. This lodge had charge of the funeral services. Music was furnished by Mrs. Morgan and Mrs. Davis, cousins of the deceased. Rev. R. E. Shields, pastor of the church officiated; burial in Green Lawn. Funeral in charge of C. J. Kehn.

Mrs. Susan Ellen Nash, 77, wife of Michael F. Nash of 91 S. Hague av., died from complications Tuesday. Two sons, Farrell and Stanton Sutherland; a daughter Mrs. Myrtle Chenoweth; eleven grandchildren, a brother and sister also survive. Due to the very great demand upon the capacity of Hoge Memorial Presbyterian church last Sabbath night for audience room the "Oberammergau Passion Play Lecture" of 1922 will be repeated Thursday night, February 1st at 7:30 P. M. (TONIGHT).

Many had to stand during the entire lecture on Sunday night. The pictures are of the finest quality, taken this summer, of the 1922 production of the play which has been repeated each ten years since 1634. The lecture explains in great detail the life of the villagers and scenes among the lofty mountains and the exact reproduction of the actual scenes in the life of Christ. Most wonderful are the scenes depicting Anton Lang as the Christ on the Cross and in the "Descent from the Cross". There is no charge for admission. A freewill offering is received to cover the expenses of the pictures.

This great Passion Play has never been pictured in motion pictures and they have thus far forbidden it entirely, this is therefore your only chance to see it in its reality and completeness. Two solos will be given during the showing of the pictures. All people of the Hilltop are cordially invited to come tonight and see these pictures.

You can get those little delicacies at Dulgar's that will make your dinner complete.

SCHOOL HAPPENINGS

This week ends the first semester in the city public schools. Highland will send about thirty-five pupils on to West High, eight to the High School of Commerce and three to Trades. There will be no regular classes on Friday. The new semester will begin at the regular school time Monday morning for all pupils except 7B's. 7B's will not come until 12:30 Monday.

Mrs. Speas of the College of Medicine of Ohio State University gave a talk for girls at the Highland School on Tuesday afternoon.

The Highland Basketball Team lost its first game of the season to Mound by a score of 17-15. The first half ended with Highland in the lead, the second half ended with a tie, but in the over-time period Mound secured more points than Highland, so won the game. The game was said by observers to be one of the fastest yet played in the Junior High League. This week's game is with Douglas.

The operetta rehearsals have been somewhat hindered this week by the prevalence of colds and influnza. A number of the cast have been kept at home and this made it more difficult even for those who were present to rehearse. The art classes have been busy designing posters to advrtise the operetta. These will probably be finished and distributed to various schools and put in store windows by the end of this week. There will be two performances of the operetta on February 10th, one for school pupils at 2:30 P. M., with a charge of fifteen cents, and one at 8:00 P. M. with a charge of twenty-five cents. In order not to annoy the people of the district by being canvassed to buy tickets it has been decided to sell no tickets in advance. There will be no reserved seats and admission will be paid at the door.

The John Burroughs Parent Teacher Association will held its regular meeting Friday, Feb. 2nd, at 7:30, A Health play, will be given, the music will be furnished by Miss Mildred Kiener, Pianist, Mr. Sober, violinist; Miss Vance, cornetist; Mr. Galen Starr Ross, will speak on American Ideals of Education. Refreshments will be served; the Fathers are especially invited.

The Hilltop Aldermyth Club

The regular meeting of the Hilltop Aldermyth club, wus cald to order at the regular club room down over the blacksmith shop, on the 31st of January, at the appointed time, 7:47 in the evening.

President Cam Chase tuck the chair an sed; ackordin to the filloserfers and fer the infermashun of the siterzens an members of this here club, we air informed that Friday is Ground Hog Day. The presserdent had jist finished these here rains, whin there wus rappin at the antie room door, an Bro. Bob O, Link wus appinted to find out who's a tryin' to break into the sacred persinks of this club; when the door wus opened Hezzie Young, the financial secretary, nigh outer breath, an a swettin like Ezra Prospect when he's a discussin on the size of the fish he cot on'ct out in Big Run; and he sed it wus the biggest fish he ever seed cot with a hook and line; an he wus nigh outer an nour tryin to land it, an then he had to go to a farm house an git a bushel basket to git it to shore; Hezzie sed, he'd been workin nite and day for fore son-se-cu-tive day's and nites, to find out who's in good an regler standin, and as his wife and dotter Virginia Maud wus takin their fust lessons in suffergets, he'd be'n so hindered by takin keer of the children, an doin the hous work that he'd haf to have another weak fer to complete his findin out. Deacon Syler ris fer more infermashun, he sed he knowed a man who owned a full flegged ground hog, an that it allus come out on the forteenth of February; an ever sinse he was nee hi to a duck, he'd allus heerd that the forteenth wus the day. Then the presserdent cald on proffesser Willum Asheraft Jenkuns, who he had invited to cum an give the club this infermashun.

Professer Willum Ashcraft Jenkuns sed, most noble and worthy presserdent, an feller members of this honorable an respected club, I perceeve that there is som more or less nollege among the members of this honerable an respected club, consernin the origin an authentisity of this celebrated an much misunderstood regal hollerday.

In the prehistoric ages, whin general Washingtun wus campin at vallie forge, an the British solders wus under the command of general Napolleon Bonnepart, an wus crossin the like Champlane towards the adderondack moutains; when Teddy Rosefelt wus killin lions in Aferca, an William Jennings Bryan, wus discorsin on the filloserfy of universal peese. This subject wus bein discussed by the most immernent filloserfers in the intire world and Kansas; an that reminds me that Kansas is one of the greatest and grownest states in this our beloved union. Kansas has produced sum of the greatest men of the wurld; I pint with pride to that illustrus reformer an statesman, Carrie Nation. Glen Wood ris at this pint an ast the presserdent if he mite make a move; an the presserdent sed the proffesser had the floor, an he'd call a resess fer five minnits to confer with the proffesser. Bob O, Link lit his pipe an sed he'd take this oppertunnity to quiet his nerves.

While the presserdent and the proffesser wus conferrin together, Bro. Esra Prospect's sixth boy, the one as has red hair an fore front teeth out; the one that tied the tomato can to widder Bean's yaller dog's tail. He hollered in at the door an sed Skid Moor's coon hound wus lickin the linnin out of the proffesser's billy goat, an the meetin wus broke up at onc't.

Zeke.

HENS HELP PASTOR

He Adds Considerably to Salary by Selling Eggs.

Organizes Poultry Club Among Members of His Congregation and Teaches Members Scientific Care of Birds.

Hartford, Conn.—The story of the Long Island pastor who discovered his flock of chickens had a language all their own may be interesting from a linguistic standpoint, but if there is any truth in the old adage that "money talks" the flock owned by Rev. H. L. Richards of Canton Center has "said a mouthful."

Out of a flock of 100 pullets and hens Rev. Mr. Richards makes a net profit of $3 a day over and above the cost of their upkeep. And not only does he add considerably to his own small salary as pastor of a small country church, but he has succeeded in bringing a greater degree of prosperity to his spiritual flock through his knowledge of his feathered one.

"When I took the pastorate of the Canton Centre Congregational church a few years ago," said Rev. Mr Richards, "I was confronted with two serious problems.

"Like all rural pastors I faced the problem of bringing up a family on the small salaries paid by country churches and the constant migration of young men on the farms to the cities. To eke out my salary, I decided to go into the chicken business in a small way. I studied the methods used at Storrs Agricultural college and carried them out to the letter with amazing results.

"I then organized among my congregation the Canton Centre Poultry club and taught the members the scientific care of birds. I organized them into a co-operative producing and selling combine, with the result that it has brought a much greater degree of prosperity to us all.

"During the last year I, as manager of the club, sold more than $3,000 worth of eggs alone from the coops of the few members of the club. Every egg sold was candled and pronounced perfect. Many were thrown away—those that showed any sign of blood streaks seen in so many eggs. At present we are getting 90 cents a dozen wholesale for our largest eggs. We have found that by lighting the coops with electricity for a few hours each night the egg production is increased 20 per cent.

BLIND MAN STUDIES STARS

Takes Course in Astronomy in Michigan University to Qualify for Degree.

Ann Arbor, Mich.—Blind from birth, with his conception of the heavens formed by descriptions from others, Joseph Caldwell of Indiana, Pa., is studying astronomy at the University of Michigan in order that he may meet the scientifical requirements to permit him to be graduated from the college of literature, science and arts.

Mr. Caldwell, a sophomore and forty-six years old, is doubly handicapped. In addition to his blindness, he lacks the mechanical aids for the study of astronomy that often are afforded students who take up other studies. Blind students of astronomy are so rare that there are no textbooks with raised type. Therefore, he depends upon fellow-students to read his lessons to him. So proficient has he become, his professors say, that he frequently memorizes a lesson by hearing it read only a few times.

In addition to astronomy, Mr. Caldwell is studying psychology, German, French and Italian. He ranks as one of the best students in his classes.

NATIONAL AERIAL DAY IS DEMANDED

Aviatrix Urges That Annual Tribute Be Paid Flyers Who Have Given Lives.

ALSO TO HONOR MOTHERS

Plan Has Official Approval of the Chiefs of Army and Navy Air Service—Lillian Gatlin Is Back of the Movement.

Don't you think that the men who gave their lives in the development of flying should be remembered?

Washington.—A young woman in aviation clothes stooped beside a flyer's grave in Arlington the other day and placed there a pink rose, a spray of white chrysanthemum and a bit of Jerusalem ivy. Twenty-four army and navy officers stood at attention close by. From overhead came the throb of five planes flying in formation, while in the background some 500 onlookers watched the little ceremony.

From this grave the young aviatrix and her little company went to the other 49 flyers' graves in the national cemetery, and last, to the grave of the unknown soldier, leaving each time the three floral tributes.

The young woman who paid this honor to the aviators who have given their lives for the country was Lillian Gatlin. She is the girl who recently came East by the air mail route from San Francisco to New York, thereby becoming the first woman to fly across the country.

Began Flying in 1911.

Miss Gatlin has been flying since 1911, and she considers herself one of the pioneers. Many of the aviators who were her friends have crashed to earth, leaving mothers, who had been so proud of them, suddenly broken. Because she gets the point of view both of the aviators who flew until they crashed in spite of everything and of the mothers they left, Miss Gatlin is giving herself to the cause of proving that the flyers are not forgotten.

She has asked President Harding to permit her to designate the second Sunday in September as a national aerial day, when tribute may be paid to the gold star mothers of aviation and their sons. Her plan has the official approval of Major General Patrick, chief of the army air service, and of Rear Admiral Moffett, chief of the naval air service.

To stop in the midst of our busy whirl to place a flower on a grave once each year and to think about men who have done their work and gone on, may seem a sentimental thing. The strictly practical minded would agree with Vachel Lindsay that "To live in mankind is far more than to live in a name."

But most people cannot take so Spartan a view. The fact remains that almost every individual craves to be remembered either for his personality or for his achievements. Miss Gatlin points out that the man who provides in his will for a tombstone generally does so because he is afraid no one else will erect a stone for him and that his name will be forgotten. The carved name on a stone is his one hope of keeping his name alive.

Flyers Not to Be Forgotten.

Miss Gatlin is determined that the flyers who risked their lives that aviation might progress ago not going to be forgotten. Their mothers are to have the comfort of being assured that their boys have not given their lives for nothing.

Miss Gatlin talk about it eagerly. She is a blonde young woman with a boyish, straightforward manner of speech and gesture, which contrasts with her close sympathy for the maternal point of view and her feminine use of symbolism.

Everything about her method of paying tribute to the flyers has some significant association. She placed the Jerusalem ivy on the graves at Arlington because it is said that it never dies. Each part of the flyer's costume she wore on her trip East once belonged to some aviator who has "flown on," as Miss Gatlin puts it. The pair of white baby shoes she carries for a charm are associated with a flyer who crashed just before his baby was born. These little shoes interested President Harding when he talked with Miss Gatlin about the proposed national tribute. The pink roses are reminiscent of Lincoln Beachey.

GOUT NOW ALMOST EXTINCT

London Physician Declares That Change to Temperate Habits Is Responsible.

London.—Gout, the age-old disease with which so many members of the aristocracy used to be afflicted, is now nearly extinct, according to Sir William Wilcox, prominent physician, who declared in a recent lecture that he had not seen a case of primary gout—that is, gout attacking a person for the first time—for several years.

He attributed its disappearance to more temperate drinking habits and the modern tendency to get away from the fancier foods and return to the simpler and more wholesome dishes.

Famous Old Square Rigger, Gloria, Gets Stay of Execution.

Once Queen of the American Merchant Marine and Holder of Scores of Sailing Records in Every Ocean.

Seattle, Wash.—Memories of the golden days of the clipper ship era stirring the hearts of Boston men have brought about a stay of execution for the famous old square-rigger Gloria of the seas, once queen of the American merchant marine and holder of scores of sailing records in every ocean.

Condemned to the funeral grounds for the copper and iron in her hull, the Glory, as she is affectionately known by many a sailor throughout the ports of the seven seas, was being towed down from Puget sound to be beached when a telegram was received from Boston asking a reprieve. The Boston men plan to tow the old ship to Boston to rig her as she was in her heyday and moor her in Boston harbor as a monument to the American sailing ship, now fast vanishing before the encroachment of the faster but less romantic steamers and motor cargo carriers.

The Glory, built in East Boston in 1869, was the last masterpiece of Donald McKay, premier American builder of the clipper ship age. In the early part of her career she made remarkable passages between New York and San Francisco and between East coast ports and Europe. Later, with the rapid development of ship construction, she fell upon evil days and became a coal and cargo barge. A few years ago the gallant old square rigger was converted into a floating fish refrigeration plant and warehouse, and early last year was sold as junk.

Shipping men who inspected the old vessel said her hull today was as sound as when she slid down the ways 58 years ago.

THE SLEEVE DOG

The first sleeve dog show was held at Princes hotel, London, for dogs under six pounds, with "Tiny Kival," shown here, winning the championship cup. "Tiny Kival" was easily the best at the show, likewise being the smallest, and found little trouble being comfortable in the cup awarded.

JAPANESE NUPTIALS COSTLY

Even in Poorest Families Bride, Besides Her Trousseau, Must Provide Household Utilities.

Osaka.—Even in the poorest families in Japan, weddings are a heavy item, as the bride, besides her own trousseau, is expected to supply certain household utilities, such as laundry and medical apparatus.

The League of Women's Societies says that 400 yen ($200) will cover the marriage costs, and suggests that parents put aside 1 yen monthly from the birth of a girl baby, which, by the time she reaches twenty, the marriageable age, would, with interest, amount to 441 yen.

The league estimates her trousseau, including 15 wedding kimonos and obis (girdles), housekeeper books, laundry apparatus and medical apparatus, at 370 yen. With 30 yen, plus an equal amount from her fiance, the wedding ceremony may be held.

Penguin Drops Pebble at Feet of "Lady Love"

London.—The social habits of penguins were described by Surgeon Commander Murray Levick, just returned from the Antarctic, who lectured here.

He says that when the birds are mating, the males walk about in groups from nest to nest. When a male makes a selection he places a pebble at the feet of the hen.

Then the other males fight him, and if his resistance is hardy, he is let alone and the other males go about their courting.

Social Affairs

At the Robbins-Dreiser School of Music, on the evening of Feb. 14, members of the Orchestra and Dramatic Club will entertain with, "A Chinese Tea-Pot." Costumes will be in evidence, oriental incense and an entire air of the Orient will be featured. The program will be given by some of the younger pupils. Those taking part are: Betty Overholt, Walter Gable, Marie Kent, Mary Jane Scully, Helen Moorman, Anna Reese, Ethel Marie Walcutt, Sarah Keefer, Frances Gemeinhart, Dorothy Deckard, Mary Crabbe, Thelma Pressler, Mary Catherine Page, Vernon Hedrick, Delbert Ardle, Arthur Naltner.

Mrs. Watson, of N. Warren Ave., was hostess to the Hilltop Embroidery Club, on Wednesday, January 31st, at her home. The next meeting of the club will be Wednesday, February 14th, at the home of Mrs. C. J. Randall on N. Terrace Ave.

The Hilltop Circle, of the Child's Conservation League, will hold their next meeting on Monday, February 12th, at the Hoge Memorial church at 2:00 P. M. A lady has been secured to take care of these children, and it is very much desired that all the mothers bring the little ones with them to this meeting.

Th J. R. B. Class of the Glenwood M. E. church, will hold their regular monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. John Evans, 25 N. Terrace St., on Tuesday evening, February 13th. The assisting hostesses are Mrs. Benderm, Mrs. Edna Crum, Mrs. Moier A. Duff, and Mrs. E. V. Fairchild.

The S. P. I. class of Glenwood church will hold their regular monthly business meeting at the church, Monday evening, February 12th. Lunch will be served at 6:30, followed by a business meeting. All members are urged to be present.

Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Geyer, Mr. and Mrs. Koerner, Mr. and Mrs. John Evans and son Robert, Melvine Tracy and Lawrence and Edna Geyer spent last Friday evening with the latter's father, to remind him of his birthday.

You can get those little delicacies at Dulgar's that will make your dinner complete.

Health Hints

The above is a good daytime program. At night, take a hot bath before retiring. Ventilate your room. Wrap up in porous blankets and sweat all night. Throw off covers one by one until comparatively dry. On arising, take a cold plunge or towel bath or a vigorous rubbing with a rough dry towel.

Eat less than the appetite demands. The trite saying, "Feed a cold and starve a fever," is almost universally misunderstood. It means: If you overeat when you have a cold you will have a fever to starve. To eat beyond the actual needs always means storing up more poison, and that makes a cold worse.

Poison is being stored up in your body all the time. In health this poison is finding its way out constantly.

There are 25 miles of pores in your skin. One third of the poison excreted from your body is supposed to go out thru these pores. If your pores are all closed up you would not live over night. If partially closed up you are very uncomfortable—with a cold.

What can I do to keep these pores open and free?

The best thing one can do for himself is to exercise freely in pure air. The resulting perspiration will push its way out through the pores and thus carry out the poison and keep the pores open.

Another one-third of the poison is supposed to pass out by the breath. The air which you take into your lungs should be pure. The outgoing breath, we know to be very impure—laden with poison. Think for a moment upon the amount of poison the outgoing breath can take care of in 24 hours. Here is a good argument for deep breathing in pure air, always, but especially if one has a cold. Exercise promotes deep breathing.

The other one-third, or less, of the body poison is taken care of by the bowels and kidneys.

Dr. O. E. McFadon, Osteopath, 2393 West Broad Street. Hilltop 243.

If you are going to buy or sell, see Mrs. Walker, 2457 W. Broad. Hilltop 474 or 560.

The Story-telling hour from 9 to 10 A. M., Saturday, at the home of Mrs. F. P. Brown, 64 N. Powell Ave., we hope to have a story teller from China, who will have an interesting story for the children.

T. J. Hunter, formerly a resident of the Hilltop, and connected with the Barnhart-Seiller Co., has engaged in the general contracting and building business; under the firm name, of T. J. Hunter and Co. His many friends on the Hilltop wish him well.

The first Noon-day luncheon of the Hilltop Chamber of Commerce was held last Thursday at Dulgar's. The attendance was up to expectations; the interest best ever; the committees all ready to work. The subject of the Library was the source of a bunch of fine suggestions, and action is on for the establishing of the same in the near future.

This is one of the greatest opportunities ever given to any community to obtain a magnificent library—the result of years of careful study, and selected by a great student. If you want to learn more about the proposition, ask any member of the Chamber of Commerce. The success of the first luncheon will assure the attendance again of every one who was there. Let the Secretary know that you are coming so there will be a reservation for you.

Hilltop Deaths

The one-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. William W. Fast, Richardson Ave., died last Sunday, from pneumonia, at the home of the grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Fast, of Derby, O. Funeral services will be held at the M. E. Church, at Derby; burial at Mt. Sterling.

Pneumonia caused the death, Sunday, of Helen Lucille Phillips, five-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Phillips, 90 Richardson Ave. 3 brothers and 1 sister survive. Funeral services were held from the residence, Tuesday, Rev. R. T. Stimmel officiating, burial at Galloway.

William Beinecke, aged 53, who suffered a stroke of paralysis two weeks ago died Monday at his home, 362 S. Park Ave. His widow, Mrs. Lena Beinecke, three daughters, Miss Elsie Beinecke and Mrs. Geo. Dye of Marietta, and Mrs. Della Griffith of Cleveland, and two brothers survive. Funeral services were held Wednesday, burial Union Cemetery.

Mrs. Matilda Wing, aged 48, of 291 Hawks Ave., died of complications, Friday, February 2d. The husband, one daughter, Mable and one son, George survive. Funeral was held Tuesday afternoon at the residence, burial in Greenlawn. C. J. Kohn, undertaker.

We wish to thank our friends, neighbors and relatives for their kindness and beautiful floral offerings; also Rev. Stimmel for his consoling words, and Mrs. Leonard for the beautiful singing during the bereavement of our little daughter.—Mr. and Mrs. Earl Phillips, 90 S. Richardson Ave.

FRENCH BIRTHS LOWER

High Cost and Other After-War Conditions Are Cause.

In Comparison With 100 Years Ago Each French Marriage Brings Fewer Than Two Children, Instead of Four.

Paris.—The high cost of living, lack of apartments and homes for newly married couples, selfishness, too many women employed in industry, and too much pleasure are the general causes assigned for the alarming decrease of the birth rate in France, now the lowest in Europe.

This is a condition that has been accentuated by the war, which took large forces of men to the front, whence many never returned. The war also created new conditions of living for women, gave them work, made them independent, and disinclined to marry readily, and less inclined to have children. This situation is set forth at length by a national alliance for increasing French population.

In comparison with 100 years ago, each French marriage brings fewer than two children, instead of four children, whereas England's marriages bring nearly three children instead of nearly five 100 years ago. In Germany in 1841 the average marriage brought 4.44 children, as compared to 2.2 in 1921.

The birth decrease does not result from high mortality or relatively fewer marriages. France's population of 39,000,000 in 1922 is practically that of 1900. The number of marriages for that year was 280,000, or about the average since then, with the years following the war showing a larger number, which is now returning to average. For 1921 the number of marriages was 456,000, and for 1922 it was a little higher.

Until 1914, the number of births averaged 800,000 yearly. During several of the war years the number dropped to fewer than 400,000. The first six months of 1922 showed 386,726, as compared to 421,180 for the first six months of 1921.

It is argued that if France is to hold her place in the world and send emigrants to her colonies, she must pass laws, as already proposed in parliament, to give the voting majority to married men, reduce family taxes and give bonuses for each child born. Already families enjoy lower railway fares.

Hilltop Boy Struck by Auto

Richard Liebensperger, nine-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Liebensperger, 459 S. Burgess Ave., met with a very serious accident while attempting to cross Sullivan Avenue, near his home on Sunday morning, when struck by a touring car traveling at a high speed. His body was dragged about 40 yards after being struck. The driver of the machine, Fremont Petty, aged 30, claims he was not speeding. The boy is in Mt. Carmel Hospital and is still unconscious.

"Timmie," as Richard was called, was a pupil in Third A Class, John Burroughs school. The X-Ray reveals there is no fracture as was thought at first. Four teeth were knocked out, and his lip badly cut, requiring several stitches, also stitches were taken in the torn part of his leg.

Boy Scouts

Troop 31, Boy Scouts of America, will hold a banquet Friday night at Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church, to which they are inviting their fathers and mothers. They have a very interesting program, to be given after the banquet is over. Rev. R. E. Shields and Mr. Frank A. Doty will speak and give some dialect readings. Besides the stunts given by the members of the troop. Mr. Doty will also speak at the Big Sing and Rally of the Boy Scouts of Coshocton, on Sunday afternoon, February 11th.

Hustling Hugh Stewart, of Troop No. 9, Boy Scouts, has been home with the flu, but he is out again, wearing the same sunny smile.

Jake Merriman, of Troop No. 21, won the tussle with the cold and is on duty again at Seiller's. Ready for TWO BIG EATS, ask Jack.

Mr. Harry J. Page has taken charge as Scout Master of Troop No. 9, Boy Scouts, located at St. Aloysius Church, with his son Charles as assistant scout master. And this is one of the best troops on the Hilltop, composed of a fine bunch of lads. Mr. Page is an old scout master and his troop is to be congratulated in securing him as their scout master.

Proposed Change of Street Names

Where do you live? This will be very difficult for some people to answer, for a while at least, if City Engineer Simpson's recommendation is followed out. He suggests the changing of the names of the following streets on the Hilltop.

Highland Ave., from Sullivant to Broad, changed to Montana Ave.; Palmetto St., from Clarendon Ave., to Westmoor St., changed to Palmetto Ave.; Park Ave., from Sullivant Ave., to Glenview Blvd., Warren Ave., from Sullivant Ave., to north corporation line, change to, no name suggested; Eldon Ave., Rich Ave., to north terminus, canged to Terrace Ave.; Eldon Ave., Terrace Ave., to Glenview Blvd., changed to Ridge Ave.; Glenview Blvd., Eldon Ave., to Eureka Ave., Eldon Ave. The residents along these streets should have something to say about the change of the names; some of the suggested changes are very greatly needed to eliminate the endless confusion caused by the similarity of names, and of streets and avenues of the same name. But this matter should be worked out in a thorough and systematic manner; and then be permanent. If you have any suggestions in the matter, get in touch with the President or the Secretary of the Hilltop Chamber of Commerce; this organization is in position to have your wishes recognized. The Hilltop interests are best conserved by the Hilltop Boosters.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Fetters, of 445 Highland Ave., are moving on Friday to their new home on the Powell Pike, to what is known as the Willow Farm, which they have recently purchased. They have lived in their present home for thirty-one years, having lived for the previous five years at 443. Mrs. Thomas says that most of the people who lived here then have either died or moved away. There were only a few houses in that locality, and the mud was so deep at times that they could not get away from home only by walking and wading through the mud and water. For a number of years Mrs. Thomas has been keeping a boarding home for children. Many of them came from the Juvenile Court, or were orphan children who were sent to her. She has care for 690 children during that time. Their new home is near the new O'Shaughnessy dam; where they will be pleased to see their Hilltop friends. They have ordered the Hilltop Record sent to them so they can keep in touch with what is going on around their old home.

The Second Division of the Glenwood Ladies Aid Society will meet next Tuesday afternoon, Feb. 13th, at the home of Mrs. Edwards, 75 Belvideres Ave. Mrs. Decker and Mrs. Jones will be assistant hostesses.

Have you had a guess on the Jar of Gum at Dulgar's? You may get the box of Temptation Chocolates.

The Parent Teacher Association of the West Broad St. School will have a very interesting program at the building Friday afternoon, a more extented report of same will be given next week.

The Hilltop Church of Christ defeated Holy Family by a score of 30 to 18. All of the teams seem pretty well balanced and the future games will decide who is the better.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Havard, of Kansas City, Kan., have concluded a two-week's visit with the former's sister, Mrs. J. H. Bishop, 237 Eldon Ave.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Garrison, 49 N. Warren Ave., an 8½ pound son, January 30th. He has been named Eugene Wissler.

The Junior Queen Esther Circle of Glenwood M. E. church will meet with Pauline Hanawalt, 126 Eldon Ave., on Monday evening, February 12th, at 7:00 o'clock. The girls are asked to bring their thimbles as some pretty things are to be made for supply work.

Pelican Pecks

Cooperation is the biggest word in modern business and it takes two or more people to make it real!

It is reported that the Hilltop is the best place in Columbus for radio antennae—that is the outside catching wires. We are high up, have clear air, and no static interference. Several fine sets are getting anything from Schenectady to New Orleans or Denver.

Some husbands and wives are saying that when their currents get crossed—there's too much static!.

Real estate is a good buy on the the Supreme Court decision and is sitting as Commissioner. Congratuls-Hilltop, how much do you own?

Pecking at things in general and things in particular is like getting things done by the United State Senate—it may take an extra session.

I see they are holding a Chamber of Commerce dinner each Thursday, with chicken and everything. That is a wise move. The merchants are wisely getting together for their own and the community's good.

THE PELICAN hears many comments on the items he mentions but none asks him, "Who is you?"

We've heard it said recently that there will be something stirring about THE LIBRARY soon. Then we say—"GO TO IT!!"

Speaking of Skip-stop—it is!
Just to show you that the printer still makes some mistakes he leaves out an item now and then.

We recall something about the dumb-bells once that was written under this heading—we found another—A dumb-bell is a man who drinks "home-brew" made in New York. "Dumb" and "bell" will toll!

A dumb-bell is that man—who drives a limousine when he can afford only a flivver.

The best improvement on the Hilltop would be that everybody wanted it improved.

That Masonic Home will be a great addition. The public buildings going up are a source of great pride. Think of all the schools, churches, theatres and other buildings built, building or about to be.

NEXT—a branch of Y. M. C. A.
Did someone say Chautauqua? Not far off at that.

If you are going to buy or sell, see Mrs. Walker, 2457 W. Broad. Hilltop 474 or 560.

Mr. Karl Webber, who has been confined to the hospital for the past two weeks with sleeping sickness, is slowly improving, but not considered out of danger. The attending physician is hopeful of his recovery.

Watch for Our Big Edition

On February 22d The Hilltop Record will issue a large special edition, largely devoted to the history and development of the community from the time it was first inhabited to the present. This will be worth while to every resident of the Hilltop. It will be worth retaining for its historical value.

Another feature will be the present activities along the Real Estate and Home Building line; you will be surprised to know what is doing along line this year in your neighborhood.

No part of the city has had such rapid growth, and permanent improvment; a community of comfortable, convenient and happy home. You will want to obtain and retain this historical edition; and this is only one of the many good things we have in store for the subscribers. We want you on the list; if we fail to see you call us at Hilltop 701 or Hilltop 582 and an authorized person will call and take your subscription. Call up just now as you read this and have the matter attended to at once. Only 50 cents per year. Worth three times as much.

A Rare Treat

Two things are assured when Jean MacDonald comes to entertain the Glenwood Lyceum Course, Thursday evening, February 15th. Every person who attends, no matter how highly cultured or how little cultured, how old or how young, will have a good time and be kept awake and happy as long as she remains on the platform. And a distinctly wholesome impression will remain long after she has departed. One of the typical comments received by the Redpath Bureau concerning the work of Miss MacDonald says: "Our community is better for having had her among us. Scotch-Irish faces that were not given to smiling threw off their masks with reckless abandon. It certainly was a varied entertainment—entirely worth while."

Dr. G. R. Robbins returned from Cincinnati Tuesday evening and reports a great reception in that city last Sunday at the Oakley Street Baptist church. He has promised to preach the dedication sermon of the fine new church the last of March and raise the debt which is about fifteen thousand dollars, and then conduct a two-week's Evangelistic service.

Special Evangelistic services will begin next Tuesday evening at the Burgess Ave. United Brethren Church. Rev. E. B. White will be assisted by Rev. J. G. Speers of Logan, O. Special emphasis will be given to the music, and a number of the well known singers of the city will assist. Services will be held each evening at 7:30, the series continuing for two weeks.

The Senior Queen Esthers of Glenwood M. E. church will give a "Chicken Supper," Tuesday evening, February 20th. Supper will be served between the hours of 6:00 and 7:30. Tickets now on sale. Price, 35 cents. Inquire and get yours early. Proceeds for Missionary Work carried on by this Society.

Another Sermon

Another sermon in the series, "Living Men Great and Good," on the subject, "Three American Statesmen," will be given at Hoge Memorial Presbyterian church, by the pastor, Rev. Richard E. Shields, Sunday morning at 10:30 A. M. Last Sabbath the pastor spoke on "Three great Preachers," mentioned first, Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of the M. E. church, of Pittsburgh; Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, of New York City, and Dean W. R. Inge, Dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, England. He gave some of the intimate life history of the three men, their field of influence and the elements which make them outstanding preachers today. Bishop McConnel noted for his intervention in the affairs of state when we almost were dragged into Mexico and as Chairman of the Steel Strike Report of the Later church World Movement Commission and Dr. Fosdick for his wonderful influence with students in his books, "The Meaning of Prayer," "The Meaning of Faith," "The Meaning of Service" and "The Manhood of the Master" and "Christianity and Progress" and his ability as a forceful modern preacher, and Dean Inge for his commanding modern position in the Church of England and the British Empire.

Come Sunday and hear "Three American Statesmen."

Mrs. John Giller will give a Welsh reading at the meeting of the Woman's Welsh Club, Friday afternoon, at the home of Mrs. C. W. Walton, 29 Eldon Ave. Plans will be completed for the St. David's day dinner to be given March 1st, at the Central M. E. church.

WHY YOU SHOULD BUY ON THE HILLTOP

Every person who lives on the Hilltop should be interested in every thing that pertains to the success of every business located there. If you are a property owner, you should do so because the success of the business helps to make your property more valuable; if you are a renter, you should do so, because every purchase made at one of the Hilltop stores, helps that business man to serve you better; it also enables him to know the needs of his customers, and if he does not have just what you want he will be glad to get it for you and deliver it to your door. We are a city of seventeen thousand people, who live and have our homes and interests on the Hilltop; the spirit of co-operation, and community welfare is necessary to make this the most sought for part of the city to live in. The Hilltop Chamber of Commerce and every other organization is working for the success of every line of business; let us get the spirit of helpfulness, remembering that the success of any one line of business means more success for every other line. Moral, never buy an article anywhere until you have failed to get it on the Hilltop. Do this and you will help to Boom our HOME STORES, and make your shopping easier, and cheaper.

The Legislator is trying hard to burden the people with unnecessary laws; a man has to have a license to go out on his farm and shoot a rabbit; and he must have a license to go down and catch a fish out of the creek which runs through his farm. And now they are trying to eliminate the Eagle and the Rooster from the party ballots. And a man who expects to be absent from the city at election time must go to the presiding judge of the precinct, three days before the election and register his vote; of course if he is in Florida or California, it will be only a little matter to come back to register his vote. But if he is sick the election officer will go to his home and register his vote.

Benjamin Franklin became famous through his experiment with kites. We venture, however, that some of our Hilltop boys could give the great Franklin pointers in the art of making and flying kites. The kite season is here, for we saw (not the first robin) a boy the other day when the thermometer was hovering close to zero, out on Hague Ave., flying a kite.

Caught on the Scale

The following dialogue between two High School girls, does not speak very well for the present day "Higher education."

"Say, Maxie, do you know Bill Hoosis?" "I'll tell the world, Mae." "Well, watcha think that red hot had the gall to spring on me at the strut last p. m.?" "Haven't the least idear. Whatdid he pull?" "Well, I'll tell ya. He said that I was the only frill he ever fell for and that he wanted me to marry him as soon as I left school." "Well, whatcha know about that! And whatdid you tell him?" "I told him to tie the ball outside." But these were not Hilltop girls.

List your Hilltop property with Barnes Bros., 118 N. Burgess. Hilltop, 2646, 2442 or 6629.

WOMAN ORDERS DOG EPITAPH

"More I Saw of People, More I Thought of Dogs," Words She Has Chiseled on Marble.

New York.—"The more I saw of people, the more I thought of dogs," is the line that Mrs. Sidmon Mollis ordered for an epitaph. And already it is chiseled on a marble bust of herself, which, by the terms of her will, made public, will rest on a pedestal that will emmase her ashes.

Also, in her will she leaves her considerable property, the amount of which she declined to reveal, to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, to build near New York the largest animal hospital in the world, as a memorial in her name.

At the entrance will be the bust, which already has been executed by Enrico Quattrini, the Papal sculptor, who, to gratify this whim, idealize, divided his time between it and a rush order for a monument to the late Cardinal Rampallo.

Sees Danger in Finger Bowls.

Salem, Oregon.—Finger bowls in public places are "filthy, dangerous and good only as tip inducers," according to the state board of health, which, at its annual meeting here, adopted a regulation requiring they be sterilized after using, or that paper bowls be used.

Abraham Lincoln

You will find in this issue some of the brightest and best of the many sayings of Abraham Lincoln, whose birthday we celebrate next Monday; every pupil in the Hilltop schools should memorize these sayings. Preserve the Record, and these sayings which have given to us by one of the greatest men that ever lived.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN SAID

Hold on with a bulldog grip.

It's all in one word, thorough.

Give the boys a chance.

Nothing can be lost by taking time.

Freedom is the last, best hope of earth.

Calling a sheep's tail a leg doesn't make it so.

Wealth is a superfluity of what we don't need.

Many have got into a habit of being dissatisfied.

Don't swap horses while crossing a stream.

When you can't remove an obstacle, plough around it.

Discourage litigation, there will still be business enough.

God bless my mother. All I am or hope to be I owe to her.

Be sure you put your feet in the right place, then stand firm.

When you have written a wrathful letter—put it in the stove.

Is a man to blame for having a pair of cowardly legs?

Faith in God is indispensable to successful statesmanship.

There is no grievance that is a fit object of redress by mob law.

Suspicion and jealously never did help any man in any situation.

It is better only sometimes to be right than at all tmies to be wrong.

If men never began to drink they would never become drunkards.

I do not thing much of a man who is not wiser today than he was yesterday.

I am like the boy that stumped his toe; hurt too much to laugh and too big to cry.

Meet face to face and converse together—the best way to efface unpleasant feeling.

The Lord must love the common people—that's why he made so many of them.

Keep that temperance pledge and it will be the best act of your life.

I want it said of me that I plucked a thistle and planted a flower where I thought a flower would grow.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Theodore Roosevelt, in an address at a Lincoln birthday anniversary, said, "I am speaking on the occasion of the celebration of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln and to men who count it their peculiar privilege that they have the right to hold Lincoln's memory dear and the duty to strive to work along the lines that he laid down. We can pay most fitting homage to his memory by doing the tasks he allotted to us in the spirit in which he did the infinitely greater and more terrible tasks allotted to him."

HIS TEACHING—Mr. Lincoln's clear sense of justice has been recognized by the world. He is said to often have preached this sermon to his own boys. "Dont' drink, don't smoke, don't chew, don't swear, don't gamble, don't lie, don't cheat. Love your fellow men and love God; love truth, love virtue and be happy.

The purity of the personal habits of the boy enabled the man to utter one of the most beautiful testimonies in any language. It was this: "I have never knowingly planted a thorn in any human breast, but I have always endeavored to pluck a thorn and plant a rose where I thought a rose would grow." The boy who gained self-mastery over his personal habits also gained the mastery over poverty, by making the best of his limited opportunities. He used his muscle to turn up the soil for the seed; he used his brains to turn up the riches of true advancement.

One day, when the President was with the troops who were fighting at the front, the wounded, both Union and Confederate, began to pour in. As one stretcher was passing Lincoln, he heard the voice of a lad calling to his mother in agonizing tones. Lincoln's great heart filled. He forgot the crisis of the moment. He ordered the carriers to stop. Kneeling and bending over the wounded soldier, he asked, "What can I do for you my hope that my message will ever reach boy." "Oh, you will do nothing for me you are a Yankee, and I cannot my mother, he replied." Lincoln, in tears, his voice full of tenderest love, convinced the lad of his sincerity. Then he gave his farewell words without reserve. The President ordered them copied, and ordered that they be sent that night, with a flag of truce, into the enemy's lines.

PRINCE MUST EARN LIVING

Aage of Denmark Serves in French Army After Loss in Bank Failure.

Copenhagen, Denmark.—Prince Aage of Denmark, whose fortune was wiped out in a recent bank failure, has gone to Morocco to earn a living as a major in the French colonial forces. Just before he departed, at the time of the Christmas holidays, he said he was genuinely sorry that he could not take up an active business career in his own country. He had never enjoyed anything more, he added, than the job he once held for several months in a foreign branch of a well-known American firm, neither his employers nor the other employees knowing his real identity.

In Denmark, Prince Aage was called the American prince. His habits and tastes were similar to those characterising citizens of the United States. Most of his intimate friends were Americans, and their mode of life was his. Soon after the war the prince visited the United States, plunged into society, and adopted many American ways.

Recently it was thought desirable to use the prince in an ambassadorial capacity, but with his fortune gone he was unable to accept a post paying only a small income. So he has entered military life, having the reputation of being one of the finest soldiers in Denmark. Princess Aage and the couple's five-year-old son have gone to live in Italy at the home of the princess' father, Count Calvi di Bergolo.

RUSS GENERAL IN STEERAGE

Ivanoff, Army Chief Under Czar, Escapes Bolsheviks and Arrives at Seattle.

Seattle, Wash.—With an English-Russian dictionary in his hand, Gen Alexander Ivanoff, who in 1917 commanded the armies of the czar in Russia on the eve of the revolution, was here as a steerage passenger. He announced his intention of staying in Seattle, learning English, and getting a job.

General Ivanoff, apparently of middle age, said he had little money, but was not discouraged. He said his wife, in Shanghai, would come to Seattle soon.

After the fall of the imperial government, General Ivanoff became a fugitive, hounded by Bolshevik agents, but managed to reach Harbin, whence he easily made his way to Japan.

Milk Scarce in Berlin.

Berlin.—On account of the scarcity and high price of milk extraordinary measures have been taken for aiding the poor in various communities. The Gardelegen creameries agreed to contribute one mark toward a fund in behalf of babies and invalids for every liter of milk handled.

Paris.—The participation of the American expeditionary force in the European war will be duly commemorated in the nomenclature of the streets of Paris. The municipal council soon will rename the task of renaming some 300 of the city's thoroughfares and, according to French custom, the leading figures of the war will be freely honored.

Thus far only Gen. Gallieni, the defender of Paris; Guynemer, the "ace of aces" in aviation, and Col. Bonnet, who distinguished himself at Soissons, have been the honored. General Pershing was on the list that was under consideration when the work was suspended on account of objections to the abolition of old names because of sentimental or historical reasons. Pershing, Clemenceau, Foch and other leaders are on the new list, however.

There still remains a score of streets in Paris with German and Austrian names that may never be changed. Included are the rues Beethoven, Gluck, Meyerbeer, Richard Wagner, Mozart, and Palatine, the rue de Vienne and the Place Budapest. Streets that recall great German musicians and poets probably will be left unchanged.

It has been decided to rechristen all streets that were named after the owners of the property through which they were originally cut. In addition there will be 150 new streets opened in consequence of the demolition of the city fortifications, which will furnish ample opportunity to honor the greatest heroes of the war.

Paris streets and squares with American names at present are Avenue President Wilson; rues Lincoln, Franklin, Louisiana and Washington.

WE WANT THAT LIBRARY

The Holmes Hilltop Library

After considerable investigation of the details of the matter of locating the Holmes Library on the Hilltop, the Committee which has in charge the matter of making arrangements for the same have arrived at a plan for some action immediately.

The Holmes Collection which is stored at the Glenwood Shelter House at present and comprises a library of books larger than the Maggie Fager Library in the lower West Side, was given to the city of Columbus by Judge Holmes, a respected and admired lawyer in the city for years. In the terms of the bequest he asks that the books be kept together and that it be specially offered to the West Side.

Many efforts have been made to locate it but thus far to no avail. Now the Committee appointed by the Chamber of Commerce of the Hilltop is arranging for a definite canvass of the Hilltop for securing the necessary funds for locating this fine library at a central point probably over the Bank at West Broad and S. Park Ave. The plan will call for the efforts of twenty five men and twenty five women to canvass thoroughly the entire community for the library.

After consultation with Librarian Hugh and the State Librarian it appears that Branch libraries in the city will be unlikely of establishment until the city fathers are convinced of their necessity and of the available monies for the same.

To establish and maintain this library with additions in books from the State Library every four months it will cost about $1500.00 (Fifteen hundred dollars) this will rent the room, secure heat, light, and put a capable woman in charge daily.

The small library in The Bottoms loans from 100 to 300 books a day. This Holmes library is even better for reference and reading purposes. Magazines will be placed on the reading tables and it is hoped that story-hours and children's work by the Librarian will add much to the interest of the school children in this venture.

The date of the canvass will be announced next week. It will be some time in March.

Already the West Broad Parent Teachers Association has voted and is ready to pay $100.00 toward the upkeep. We await other organizations.

The amount to be raised $1500.00 is to be secured by individuals and families taking $1.00 membership shares in the Library Association which entitles one to vote for the Trustees and will perpetuate the library. Individual receipts will be made out by the canvassers. Of course books will be taken by any reliable person regardless of their payment. Out of 20,000 people on the Hilltop we surely can find 1500 who want Library service.

This will not stand in the way of the establishment at any time of the Branch Library service by the city but the Committee feels will clear the way for such service whenever it is voted.

One of the ideas of the Committee is that eventually our Association will be strong enough to ask the city to take over the maintenance of this very valuable service to the people of our Community.

Our slogan for the campaign will be "WE WANT THAT LIBRARY" !

A committee consisting of the principals of the schools will assist the general committee in the assistance secured from the children for the success of this community-wide canvass.

"WE WANT THAT LIBRARY!"

IF LINCOLN SPOKE TODAY

If Lincoln, man of tempered mold,
Should speak to us today,
What would his word to us unfold
Of progress in his way?

What would he say of racial strife
'Gainst which he gave his all;
Of selfish greed and lawless life
That heeds not Gods high call?

What of the chains we forge anew
In shop and market-place;
The slaves we make to serve the few
Not to uplift the race?

What would he say of bigot's plan
To keep us with the tribe and clan
To shackle freedom's mind,
Traditionally blind?

What healing words for open sores
Left by war's heated breath,
For ills that love alone restores,
While malice gives but death?

O Captain, breaker of men's chains,
Speaks to us as of yore
Teach us that only Love reclaims
And heals forevermore.

—Arthur E. Cowley.

Health Hints

By Doctor Mack.

Do you buy your cereal foods in cartons at the grocery? If so, you pay about $10 a bushel for them and do not get the complete food value of the grain. The milling and "refining" processes take away the mineral salts that are necessary to your proper nourishment. Your boxed up food may contain protein, carbohydrates and fats in the proper proportion but you cannot get the full benefit of them without the mineral salts which are taken out and fed to the lower animals to their advantage

Experiments have been tried in which animals were fed these "refined foods" such as we eat, with the result that many died and those that survived acted as if starved, which means that the principal nutrients (protein, carbohydrates and fats) are unavailable without the salts which are so carefully "refined" away.

There is one great reason here for so much tuberculosis as we have. The person who has most power to resist the germs that we breathe into our lungs every day is immune from tuberculosis. If the mineral salts make the food nutrients available then the lack of them lessens our power of resistance and we are prone to disease. It has been discovered that dairy herds fed upon the residue from beet sugar, corn starch, etc. show a large percentage of tuberculosis than those that are fed the entire grain product. The reason is plain that the residue does not contain the mineral salts.

Next Week's Big Paper

As we are calculating on getting out a special large edition of the Record next week....We kindly request that copy of all news items, communication and want ads be in this office NOT LATER THAN 3:30 NEXT TUESDAY AFTERNOON. Copy coming in after that time will be too late for next week's issue.

---

NOTICE

It is necessary to again bring to the notice of the patrons of the Hilltop Record not to pay a subscription price for the paper unless it be to some authorized agent. In the past month it has come to our notice that subscriptions have been collected without authority or knowledge on our part and no report to this office of the same on the part of the collector, thereby working a hardship on our regular carrier boys whom we have trusted and found reliable and honest. Also in the month of December 1922 several boys and girls turned in paid subscriptions which were duly credited and receipted for. We again warn the public that on and after the date of this issue no recognition will be given to a subscription that is not receipted for by some member of the office staff or the regular subscription manager.

PARENT-SON BANQUET

Parents of scouts in troop 21 were guests at the first annual dinner given in their honor by the troop, last Friday evening. Both fathers and mothers were invited and only a few were absent, being detained on account of illness. A very good and well prepared dinner was served, which did credit to good reputation of this troop.

Rev. R. E. Sheilds, pastor of Hoge Memorial Church, the troop headquarters gave a good after-dinner talk which was followed by some remarks from the Scoutmaster and assistant, and all parents were given the same opportunity.

This meeting was the first of its kind in the city and was looked upon by local scout headquarters as an experiment, as compared with a city-wide father-son banquet. Mr. P. A. Lint, local Scout Executive heartily endorses the "Troop-Parent-Son" gathering, claiming it instills a bigger interest and understanding of the troop activities.

Troop 21 has established a waiting list for members and has long since earned the pennant offered by President Harding for increased membership. As part of the Anniversary week program this troop also attended church in a body Sunday morning.

The West Broad Parent-Teacher Association carried out a successful program last Friday afternoon. Three-minute talks were given by mothers. Mrs. Rev. Shields sang. Refreshments were served by the Refreshment Committee.

The bake sale held in December netted $65.00. It is due to the efforts of the committee that the P. T. A. has been able to contribute to several different causes. Last year a piano was bought for the school. The association also gave the first $100.00 to the Library Fund, and at the last meeting voted $25.00 to buy bells for the school orchestra.

Social Affairs

Miss Beulah Wright of 2738 Grace St., celebrated her eighth birthday with a party on Tuesday, February 13, 1923 from 3 to 5 P. M. The invited guests were Ruth Leach, Mary Virginia Six, Alice and Virginia Honestine, Emma Jean Hastings, Jean Armor, Susie Bower, Halen Evereham, Fannie Koontz, Jeanette Hartman, Virginia Hamilton, Margaret Fletcher, Martha Wright and Harold Wright, Jr. The evening enjoyably spent by all who were present.

IT HAPPENED AT ELDON AND STEELE AVENUES, MONDAY NIGHT

It was raining hard; boots and umbrellas were in order. Quite a number of red-blooded men met in the basement of Hillcrest Baptist church, lunched together, and talked over the things that should be in the heart of every man in the community.

The subjects under discussion are highly interesting, and every man on the Hilltop who is not attached to some other form of similar endeavor is welcome to meet with us. Come and give your views of the many interesting things under discussion and enjoy the fellowship afforded. These meetings will be held at least once a month, and possibly every two weeks. Watch this paper for the next announcement.

Dr. Huff from Granville was present at last night's meeting and gave an interesting talk on the work of the church among the Indians. The general theme last evening was the evangelistic meetings now in progress. There was abundant evidence of unified effort which will no doubt be richly rewarded. Rev. Edwin McFarlane is the officiating pastor, and one who understands the hearts of men and women, and who is revered by all.

Mr. and Mrs. William Dulgar of the Dulgar Confectionery and Restaurant at Wheatland and Broad St. are having a very delightful time at Palm Beach and some of the other points of interest which they are visiting in Jacksonville, Havana, Cuba and Porto Rico. Mr. Dulgar is quite a golf player and is having a great time under the southern skies. He will send some cocoanuts up for a window display in the Restaurant.

They will have lots of cocoanuts pies after they come home.

Miss Dorothy Horton gave an entertainment for the benefit of the Twentieth Century club at London, Ohio. She was being assisted by Miss Evelyn Edwards as pianist and costumer. Miss Horton has been a pupil of the "Wynters School of Expression" for more than two years.

Pelican Pecks

Anonymous letters (that is letters unsigned) are plentiful these days. We heard of four today. There is a very severe fine for these. Besides the person who writes one is either a coward or a sneak who hides behind silence. (Note this—the Pelican is not anonymous—he uses a pseudonym (:) that's all!).

It is fine to see the progress of Boy Scouts on the Hilltop. Every boy of the proper age should consider it a rare treat to belong to some Scout Troop.

THE LIBRARY! Let's hear something about it, boys!

Ever stop to think how many good people there are in this world. If there were not a great lot of them, things would go smash!

The flu is as active as cooties in France. Once you get 'em you don't care for 'em and when you're rid of 'em you wonder if they'll return.

"Had the flu?"

We have three of the finest schools in the city on the Hilltop. Think of the advantages of this community as compared with others you have seen. Then thank your lucky stars that you live here!

The man who owns his own home is "Lord of the Manor". Buy or build and stake your life for twelve years that you'll own it. It's the only safe installment plan you can risk! "Ask the man who owns one"

. . . . . .

"Eventually why not now" ought to be the thought on every civic improvement for the Hilltop.

Beaks are tough things—they keep right on pecking!

Here's to the Ground-hog!

When Harley Held the Sack

'Twas in this "good old Columbus town,"
When Karb was Mayor, with some renown,
And Tri Mu's flourished "on the Hill,"
(They say a small bunch lingers, still)
That it was said, "the time is ripe,
Let us go forth and catch a 'snipe.' "
With guns and clubs, in gayest moods
They hiked out Hague to Skidmore's woods.
All scattered out to drive snipes back,
While Harley Carter "held the sack."
With open sack and fire close by,
He stood alone some snipe to spy.
For hours, it seemed, he watch and waited.
With eye-balls peeled, and breath abated,
When—"bang"—he heard some farmer shoot!
He dropped the sack and took a scoot
Right through the woods and brush so dense,
He never stopped to touch the fence,
But swiftly down the pike he flew,
Till "Old Hilltop," lights came in view.
And didn't wait, his breath to draw
Till safe at home with, "Pa and Ma."
His gas was low, his battery through,
His heart was only "hitting on two"
Tho' tired and weak, he gasped this hunch—
"I got home long before the bunch."

GREAT CHRISTIAN AMERICANS

Last Sunday morning at Hoge Memorial Presbyterian Church Mr. Shields took up the subject of "Three American Statesmen" in his series "Living Men, Great and Good" and gave the outstanding achievements and elements of character of Elihu Root, Woodrow Wilson and Charles Evans Hughes. The sermon was filled with interesting stories of those men and their contribution to our Christian Civilization. Two or three people in the audience had guessed beforehand the characters which were picked as the great outstanding living Statesmen of America. Especially pleasing was the noteworthy fact of the place of all three of these statesmen in the honor of the rest of the world. All three are vital churchmen and both Secretary Hughes and Ex-president Wilson are sons of ministers, Mr. Hughes of a Baptist Minister and Mr. Wilson of a Presbyterian. Hon. Elihu Root was the son of a college professor.

"Six Greatest Men of History" will be the subject of the last sermon in the series Sunday night. Special music by the Boys' Chorus and the Orchestra.

EARLY MARRIAGES FAIL

Girl, 13, and Brother, 16, Prove Parents Were Wrong.

"Marrying Burches" of Kansas City, Advocates of Early Unions, Disillusioned by Experience of Two of Family.

Kansas City, Kan.—Early marriage is losing one of its greatest supporters, the "marrying Burch family" of this city. Mrs. Burch says that times are changing and maybe it is better to wait longer. Her four married children all went to the altar before they were sixteen, but two of the weddings have turned out unhappily. Goldie, who married last year when thirteen years old, is home seeking a divorce, and John, who is sixteen, and married a thirteen-year-old girl, is also suing for separation.

It was a hard blow to the early marriage theory of Michael and Rhoda Burch, who eloped when Rhoda was sixteen, and it is believed that the experience will hold back the marriage of the younger children. Michael Burch, minister and stone-mason, whose home is also built to be used as a chapel on Sunday, had considered his children of marriageable age when they reached their 'teens.

Flossie, oldest daughter, married when fifteen years old at the altar in the home chapel. She has several children, and like Pearl, who married at fourteen, has been very happy. Their parents have pointed with pride to these examples of the success of early matrimony.

Then, John, sixteen, and a neighbor girl, thirteen, were married. Goldie, thirteen, said she was old enough to wed, too, and she became the wife of Jerry Hines, twenty-one. But these two marriages did not endure like those of Flossie and Pearl.

Goldie, not yet fourteen, is home with her baby because she could not live happily with her husband, and John blames his wife's relatives for his marital troubles.

EXPLORES CAPITAL ALONE

"You must never do it again," says the mother to her young two-year-old son who left her in the park and went alone on a tour of Washington. You will admit that two is a little young to be traveling alone in the city, but young Edward Scalia kept on going until he was picked up by the police who notified the frantic mother. Edward didn't stand back for any traffic and pedestrians were given a thrill when the lad passed in the way of automobiles. And Edward now sorrowfully admits that he is "bad boy" for leaving his mother alone in the park.

TO RID LONDON OF FOG SHROUD

Scientist Discovers Method of Eliminating Dust and Smoke From Fuel.

HARD COKE IS NOW PRODUCED

Claim Made That Invention Will Stop Much of Great Waste of Fuel That Now Exists and Cheapen Coal Mining.

London.—The London fog soon will be as much of a myth as the dodo or the unicorn if a newly discovered process of coal carbonization does all that its inventor says that it will. The man who is threatening to destroy one of the English capital's most famous traditions is John Roberts, a mining instructor of London.

Perhaps Mr. Roberts got lost in one of the swirling yellow mists as he was hurrying to an important engagement, so that he has since cherished a grudge against it. Be that as it may, the fact remains that ever since he got out of the army in 1919 he has been working to find a method of liberating London from the fog once and for all.

Coke Process Discovered.

The fruits of his labor is a new process of making semi-coke from coal. A mixture of powdered coking and noncoking coal is subjected to carbonization at a temperature of between 600 and 700 degrees centigrade, resulting in a bright, hard coke. Mr. Roberts asserts that it is easily ignited, will produce little dust and burns with a straw-colored flame producing a cheerful glow.

In attacking the fuel problem Mr. Roberts has at least gone about in the right way to eliminate the fog, for it is the smoke produced from the smoke of thousands of London grate fires that makes possible the dense fogs that this city has every autumn.

Elimination of Waste.

But ridding London of her fogs is only one of the virtues Mr. Roberts claims for his invention. He maintains that it will stop much of the great waste of fuel that now exists and will result in the cheaper mining of coal. The inventor says that about 50,000,000 tons of small coal annually is wasted in British mines, which could be converted into solid fuel and that his process will convert a large part of this waste into useful by-products, such as tar fuel oil, motor spirit, rich gas and sulphate of ammonia.

But if Mr. Roberts can only rid London of her fog the citizens will hold that he has forever entitled himself to the gratitude of his countrymen.

TO BUY BELLEAU WOOD

Association Plans Memorial to Yanks Who Fought in France.

Within the Limits of the Proposed Memorial Nearly 3,000 American Marines and Soldiers Were Killed or Wounded.

Washington.—A movement to buy the Belleau Wood battlefield in France and make it a memorial to the American forces who fought there in May, 1918, will be pushed by the Belleau Wood Memorial association, of which Mrs. James E. Fraser is president.

Special impetus has been given to the plan by the news from Paris that an Anglo-French tourist agency was planning to open an amusement park on the site and build a big hotel from which sightseeing busses would run. The association here immediately cabled to get on option on the battlefield and obtained it.

The price of the nearly 160 acres which it is desired to obtain is 200,000 francs or about $16,000. In addition to the cost of the land, money will be needed to place the area in condition to be a permanent memorial with markers, a monument, etc. The association plans also to aid in the reconstruction of the village of Belleau and adjoining territory so that the whole district may commemorate the valor of our soldiers.

President Harding has indorsed the plan and already $1,000 subscriptions to the proposed fund have been made by Mrs. Fraser, Secretary Weeks, Col. Robert M. Thompson and Otto H. Kahn. A woman in Philadelphia has promised an equal amount.

The central committee here which will direct the campaign for the fund will have as honorary heads General Pershing, Major General Harbord and Major General Le Jeune. Committees are being formed all over the country, and benefit performances, etc., are being planned in many towns and cities. Letters have been written to the marine corps, the commanding generals of the First, Third and Twenty-sixth divisions and the heads of organizations and clubs of veterans belonging to all units which fought at Belleau Wood.

Within the limits of the proposed memorial nearly 3,000 American marines and soldiers were killed or wounded during the terrific fighting of May, 1918.

A Building Boom for the Hilltop

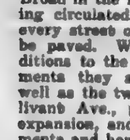
Everything points toward the biggest boon the Hilltop has ever witnessed in the building of homes and other buildings such as Storerooms, Flats, Churches, Lodge rooms, as well as several good street improvements, sewer systems all of which means more people on the Hilltop and more work for them to do. The West Side Lumber Co. reports that there is more building of homes in progress now than ever before at this season of the year; they have more contracts on their books for early and immediate delivery than ever before in the history of the Firm. The demand for good substantial homes on the Hilltop is strong as Hilltop contractors and builders are disposing of their houses as fast as they can get them built. Plans and estimates for homes are being made in large quantities. There is on hand plenty of materials that will enable the early building to be done at a very small advance over last fall and summer. The tendency of material prices is to advance somewhat at the mills which will eventually bring higher prices to the consumer. But with the good weather not far away it is hoped that production will be increased soon, and with the abundant car supply that seems to prevail at present the lumber market will soon steady again and that prices will not be distrubed very materially. Building and loan men all report abundant cash on hand and loans are easily made, builders seem to have plenty of help so that nothing seem to be in the way of a good substantial building boom for 1923. This is especially true of the Hilltop, for there is a big demand for rental, as well as homes, that folks want to buy, besides the immense amount of single houses there is to be built soon, several flats, one by M. B. H. Slater, on N. Burgess, one by Mr. John Morgan, on Broad and Whitethorne, as well as store rooms and flats for Mr. Burkett at Eldon and Broad. Hoge Memorial Presbyterian church will commense soon on a big addition to their church on S. Eureka, being 45 x 90, which is to be a modern gymnasium and Sunday school rooms. The Hillcrest Baptist church are planning a new church at Eldon and Steele immediately in front of their old building which has been moved to the rear of their lot on Steele. Westgate Lodge, F. and A. M., have plans ready for their new temple on W. Broad in the Broadview Addition. This will cost in the neighborhood of $40,000.000 and is expected to be ready for occupancy before fall. This is true of the other big buildings under way. These new buildings speak high of the Hilltop. Men and their business and institutions, Broadview addition, will spend thousand of dollars in improvements at once, such as streets, sewers, water mains, gas mains, etc. Petitions for improved streets north of Broad in the Hilltop Addition are being circulated. This will mean that every street on the Hilltop will soon be paved. With these fine new additions to the west and the improvements they are going to have, as well as the two fine additions on Sullivant Ave., gives ample room for expansion, and the class of improvements and homes that are being built assures for us only a bigger and better community.

Heed and Holton seem to be making remarkable progress in their Broadview Addition. No lots were offered for sale until late in October and with only a few weeks of good weather, nearly $100,000 worth of home sites have been placed in the hands of many of the most successful business and professional men of the Hilltop section. We are informed that most of the purchasers contemplate building during this coming year. Electric lines have already been constructed through the addition from East to West. Sewer ordinances have passed Council and contracts will be let so that actual work can start early in the spring. Council has also appropriated funds for the city's share of street improvements and the City Engineer is preparing plans for asphalt streets.

There has been a very persistent demand on the Hilltop for a strictly high class addition and Broadview is meeting that demand. All lots are restricted against flats, doubles, duplexes and all kinds of business and only good substantial single houses can be built on the Addition.



Barnett-Smalley have extended the new Hilltonia addition on the south side of Sullivant avenue from the Baby Camp west to Lechner avenue. Already a number of fine houses have been built on that addition and many more are coming.

Mr. W. G. Davis is putting up two seven-room frames—one at 144 and one at 148 N. Burgess Ave.

The new Hilltop plant of the National Ice Co. is well under way and will soon be completed.

Mr. Benjamin Phillips has just completed a 6-room at 145 North Hague, and has another 6- room in construction at 147 the same street He has a 5-room house under roof at 295 North Ogden Ave. for Mr. Fred Cruise; and has completed a 5-room house at 2740 Sutton Ave. between North Hague and Harris. He also has several others in prospect.

Resolutions of Respect by Junior Queen Esther Circle of Glenwood M. E. Church.

Whereas, Our Heavenly Father, in His divine wisdom, has seen fit to remove from our circle one whom we dearly loved, Pauline Hanawalt, and,

Whereas, Pauline was a charter member of the circle, and by her faithfulness and her devotion to Christian duty, she set for us an example of the true, unselfish, Christ-like life; therefore, be it

Resolved, that we feel that by the death of Pauline, we have suffered a great loss and in their sorrow we extend to her parents and brother our heartfelt sympathy, and we pray that Our Heavenly Father will be ever near them to comfort and to bless. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family and a copy of the same be published in the Hilltop Record, and recorded in our book.

Signed by the committee,—
Mrs. J. H. Bishop,
Margaret Elzey, Pres.
Dorothy Wells, Secy.

Health Hints

By Doctor Mack.

Read last week's Hints in connection with this.

The building of a Brazilian railroad was undertaken by American engineers with American laborers who were fed upon American white flour and prepared foods and died so rapidly that the undertaking failed. Climatic conditions were blamed for the high mortality but it was a matter of nutrition, or the lack of it, caused by the absence of the necessary mineral salts. If these American laborers had been given bread made from whole wheat flour they would have lived. In all white flour the salts have been sacrificed.

Please don't imagine for a moment that anything else can take the place of mineral salts. Common salt is nothing like the product Nature provides to aid in the digestion of the various foods and the fact that this mineral salts content has little or no food value in calories is no excuse for the reckless habit of eating white bread of various kinds and the so-called refined foods. Here the public is at fault for the people buy most readily the flour that makes the whitest bread and the food that is most attractive on the grocers shelves. The millers will make and the grocers will sell what the people will most readily buy.

If we, the people, could realize how we are committing slow suicide by eating white bread, pearled barley, polished rice, degerminated corn, refined rye, etc. and as a people would demand the grosser product the merchants would furnish them. But this will never happen. The individual must discriminate and choose and demand for himself.

Reminiscences

The first business place opened on the Hilltop was a grocery and meat market in 1883 at the corner of West Broad and Whitethorne Ave. where Moorman's confectionery now stands, and was a little one story dwelling that was converted to this use.

The first school east of Hague Ave. was built about 200 feet south of Broad in the vicinity of Whithorne and Midland Ave. in the year of 1887 36 years ago. William M. Tucker, William Ong and Thomas J. Madigan were at the time the three township school directors. It was also used for Sunday school and religious services..

The first residences built on the Hilltop, one, a brick by Thomas Thomas, a dairyman, that stood south a few rods from Broad on Whitethorn Ave. The two story double frame at the south east corner of Broad and Belvedere, was built during the construction of the State Hospital and used as a boarding place for men therein engaged. The Joseph Ong residence opposite the Hilltop Engine House once stood as it now does, on a 60-acre plat of ground. Adjoining the Ong Dairy Farm was the Scott Farm and residence.

On the 1st day of March, 1882, William M. Tucker and Thomas J. Madigan, Tucker a telegraph operator and Madigan a supervisor at the State Asylum, broke the ground and erected the two double frame dwellings Nos. 1997 and 1999 at the Madigan stop on the Hilltop. After the building of his home he resigned his position as telegraph operator at the State Hospital and went to Cincinnati for five years, then returned to Columbus and worked as a telegrapher with the Columbus & Cincinnati R. R. (now the B. & O.) serving 3½ years; then 2 years with the Big Four here and in 1898 was transferred to Indianapolis to the Superintendent of Telegraphs department were he served for 20 years when he moved back on the Hilltop in the year of 1911 in his residence where he now resides at the Madigan stop.

Mrs. Elizabeth Gould, 114 Whitethorne avenue, came to the Hilltop with her parents Mr. and Mrs. Albert Watts about 1877. They lived on a farm on which is now on the south side of Sullivant avenue near Oakley and Wheatland. To the east of them was all woods. The territory between Belvidere and Lechner avenues about half way to Sullivant was swamp land. Circuses coming this way traveling by wagon came on the National Road, but the elephants were detained around the Sullivant road and their tracks in the mud were great attractions for the youngsters along that route. Glenwood M. E. church first held services in the little brick township school house on Clarendan avenue (now a residence). The first members of that church were Mr. and Mrs. Albert Watts, and Ella Watts, Mr. and Mrs. Harman (deceased), Mr. and Mrs. Riddile, Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Six.

After the abondonment of Camp Chase, the land became a grazing land, and was afterward settled very largely by members of the Friends' congregation who came from the southern and eastern part of the state. A brick church building was built on the north side of the National Road a short distance west of the C. S. & C. (now Big Four) R. R. in which the Friends and Methodists worshipped, using different hours for their services, but both joining in the same Sunday school.

The Ladies Aid Society of Hodge Memorial Presbyterian Church will meet for their regular monthly business and social meeting Thursday afternoon March 1st, promptly at 2 o'clock at the church. ## Historical Sketch of Camp Chase

At the beginning of the Civil War Goodale park was made a camp for troops preparing for service. It was called Camp Jackson. But shortly after a new and larger site was selected four miles west of Columbus, which was also called Camp Jackson till the following June, when it was named Camp Chase. Gov. Salmon P. Chase, who had been a U. S. Senator, was elected Governor of Ohio in 1855 and re-elected in 1857. He was an ardent opponent of slavery. After serving as Governor of Ohio he was Secretary of the Treasury in President Lincoln's cabinet for some time, and then Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

Within a few months after the establishing of Camp Chase it assumed the appearance of a good sized town, containing within its boundaries about 160 buildings, including officers' quarters, privates' quarters, mess halls, stables, hospitals, cooking and baking houses, prisons, etc., besides the large drill and parade ground.

Scores of regiments were encamped here during the entire period of the war, at different times, some preparing to go to the front, and others sojourning there for a short time, preparatory to being transferred elsewhere.

When Gen. Morgan came into Ohio on his raiding tour, in 1863, the Governor, fearing an attempt might be made to attack Camp Chase, ordered the militia of Franklin, Madison, Clark, Greene, Pickaway and Fairfield counties to report immediately to Brig. Gen. J. S. Mason, at Camp Chase, to be organized and officered. Many people were scared on this occasion, and preparations were made to protect property in case Morgan should put in his appearance. Some farmers drove their horses and cattle far in the woods, or hid their stock in some secluded spot.

However, Morgan confined his raids to the southern border counties of the State, where he was finally captured and brought to Columbus and placed in the Ohio Penitentiary. But after being there a few months he effected his escape and made his way to Cincinnati, where he crossed the river into Kentucky and Tennessee. The cell in the Penitentiary is marked and can be seen by anyone visiting that institution.

It contained about 465 acres which was a noted spot in the history of the Civil War, and a part of which became the final resting place of 2360 Southern soldiers who had died while prisoners of war in its enclosures, and whose remains now lay in the little Confederate Cemetery beneath the shade of many native and imported southern trees, surrounded by a four-foot stone wall, on the extreme southern border of the old camp ground, and on the north side on what is now Sullivant avenue.

The prison section of Camp Chase was located near the southeast corner of the big camp ground near what is now Hague and Sullivant avenues. It was enclosed within a board fence about fourteen feet high, at the top of which was built platforms around it which were occupied by sentinels to guard from escape, etc. This was enclosed by an outer high board fence extending around the entire camp and parade ground. Within the prison enclosure were two rows of buildings to house the prisoners, used for mess and bunking purposes. These were long rooms, with single bunks arranged three tiers high—the occupant of the upper tier being so close to the roof as to almost brush the under side of it when he turned over. The tables for eating were composed of planks, and were adorned with plate, knife and fork, tin cup for coffee and an iron spoon for each of the thirty or forty prisoners that gathered around them. The prisoners stood while eating. A large ditch, traces of which can still be seen on South Hague, ran through the prison enclosure from west to east.

Here is a little incident that happened at one of these times: Near the camp stood a house occupied by a family of prominence in those days. The family had retired for the night, and everywhere quietude seemed to abound, when suddenly the wife was startled by hearing a "bang, bang, rattle, bang, bang," almost in her midst. She lay there almost afraid to breath, feeling sure Morgan had come and was making a night attack on Camp Chase, and all kinds of things were happening, when suddenly there came to her ear, in the midst of the darkness, the voice of her husband, which said, "Well, you're down there. Now, I suppose you'll stay there till morning!" After awakening, however, to full consciousness, she became aware of the fact that instead of a bombardment from Morgan it was a number of slats in the bed that had loosed and fallen to the floor, with the —well, you know the racket they usually made.

An interesting story of an attempt by the prisoners to escape from Camp Chase is told. It had been secretly planned and the day set—July 4, 1864. The men were to take positions in groups of three or four around the camp. The signal for action was to be "Wash fish," given by the leader as the bread wagon passed out the prison gate; he and those immediately around him falling in right behind the wagon, while others were to fall in behind them as close up as possible, with a continual pushing forward through the gate, making it impossible to close the same. Each prisoner was to have his pockets filled with rocks for defensive purposes. The morning of the fourth came, and everything looked lovely for the success of the plan, the men being jubilant over their prospects, and watching for the bread wagon to come and make its exit. Confusion came, however, through the earlier, and, as it proved, untimely arrival and depart-
